

'Fitz' question mark in Hoffa case

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN

FRANK FITZSIMMONS
He Likes the Job

WASHINGTON (AP) — Frank Fitzsimmons is like the guy who ran off with his best friend's girl while his friend was away. In this case, the girl is the Teamsters union and the friend is Jimmy Hoffa.

Most investigators believe Hoffa's disappearance nearly three weeks ago was tied to his efforts to regain control of the 2.3-million-member union from Fitzsimmons.

Hoffa's son, a Detroit attorney and his father's closest adviser, believes "elements within the union" may be responsible, but he isn't pointing the finger at Fitzsimmons.

The most widely held theory among investigators is that the 62-year-old Hoffa was kidnapped and killed, either by union figures or underworld leaders — or both — who want the present Teamster power structure left undisturbed.

Both after same 'girl'

The Teamsters union, the biggest, richest and strongest American labor union, has long been a source of both money and influence for the Mafia and other crime figures.

During his 14-year reign, the feisty Hoffa ruled the Teamsters with an iron fist. He refused to delegate authority and made all the key decisions. His hand-picked successor, Fitzsimmons, pursued the opposite course, giving authority to the regional vice presidents and others in the union hierarchy who were able to run their own fiefdoms.

In his climb to power, Hoffa cut deals with the mob, chartering paper locals for mobsters, according to Senate investigators who probed the union in the 1950s. Hoffa himself admitted to friendships with syndicate figures. He said it was in the best interest of the union.

"You develop a relationship with them, to where you don't interfere with them and they don't interfere with your business," he once said. "We make it our business — and a man who is a head of a union is a fool if he doesn't — to know who are your potential enemies."

Sources familiar with the inner workings of the union say that since 1967 when Hoffa went to jail — convicted of jury tampering and mail fraud — the mob strengthened its union ties.

A Hoffa comeback no doubt would have meant a return to autocratic rule. Regional and local Teamster officials would lose some degree of autonomy, and the mob, which has become accustomed

Portugal crowd traps Communists inside stadium

LISBON (UPI) — Troops firing into the air drove back crowds of rock-throwing anti-Communist demonstrators early Sunday, rescuing approximately 1,000 Communists trapped in a soccer stadium while attending a rally in the town of Alcobaca.

Communist Party Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal, whose car was stoned when he arrived at the rally, managed to escape the stadium by a side door escorted by soldiers.

Before the rescue, demonstrators traded gunfire with the Communists inside the stadium and trapped them there for over four hours. Hospital spokesmen said 15 persons were wounded, two of them in critical condition with shotgun wounds.

When the troops arrived and drove demonstrators back to the stadium, most of the Communists fled the town in private cars and a few trucks. Some others milled around downtown Alcobaca, a conservative stronghold 80 miles north of Lisbon.

Tough-looking anti-Communist youths, shouting "death to Cunhal," manned barricades of tree trunks and stones, blocking the sole road from the stadium to the town.

Inside the stadium were many women and crying children, foreign news reporters and television camera crews. Groups of observers

Kissinger set to shuttle

Combined News Services

VAIL, Colo. — After conferring with President Ford on the Middle East, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said late Saturday night a peace agreement was not quite complete but that he was likely to resume his shuttle diplomacy next week.

"It's not definitely settled, but there's a good chance I will go," Kissinger said when reporters asked about the prospects of his returning to the Middle East next week to set up an Israeli-Egyptian disengagement agreement in the Sinai.

Kissinger said his plans would probably hinge on developments at an Israeli cabinet meeting today.

Ford met with Kissinger for an hour in the morning to review the latest negotiations and the secretary of state spoke with reporters in the evening while he and the President were with their wives at a nightclub in this Rocky Mountain resort.

A high administration official said later Kissinger expected to head for the Middle East next Wednesday for a stay of a week to 10 days.

Kissinger's last trip to the Middle East during the spring evoked high expectations that he was the miracle worker who could bring Arabs and Israelis closer together.

But his efforts did not succeed and he returned to Washington amid speculation that his aura of deftness and skill had been irreparably damaged and that his time as secretary was nearing its end. There were even rumors Ford was about to cast him aside.

Kissinger came here after intensive meetings in Washington with Israeli Ambassador Simcha Dinitz. He reported "some Arab-Israeli clashes were reported on land and sea Saturday and a bomb exploded in a Tel Aviv synagogue. Total casualties were put at two dead and four wounded.

The violence came as President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger conferred in Vail, Colo., amid reports that Kissinger will soon be off on a Mideast mission to wrap up an interim accord between Egypt and Israel.

The Palestinian news agency Wafa reported from Lebanon that guerrillas surprised an Israeli naval vessel trying to land commandos before dawn at the Buss refugee camp near southern Lebanese coastal city of Tyre.

Wafa said phosphorous bombs fired by the Israeli vessel to cover the commandos' retreat hit a patrol jeep, killing two guerrillas and wounding another.

Wafa also reported Israeli bombardment of the Hasbaya and the Martyr Salah guerrilla base in the Arkoub region of southeast Lebanon. It said the guerrillas returned the fire. No casualties were reported.

The Israeli military command had no immediate comment on the Wafa reports. Earlier the command said Arab gunners in Lebanon fired across the border at an Israeli army patrol near the border settlement of Zarit, about 12 miles east of the Mediterranean, but there were no injuries.

The bomb explosion in the Tel Aviv synagogue slightly injured three persons. A police spokesman said the incident was being investigated for "the possibility of Arab terrorism."

State banning sale of some Chrysler cars

United Press International

California banned the sale of certain new Chrysler Corp. automobiles with the company's largest engine Saturday because the cars do not meet the state's antismog standards.

In the stiffest governmental action ever taken against the industry in the drive to end pollution, the Air Resources Board also fined Chrysler $328,000 for sending dealers cars that exceeded state emission control tests.

The action was announced by ARB chairman Tom Quinn, an appointee of Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr.

The ban on sale of cars with the large 440 cubic inch displacement engines would affect some Chrysler New Yorkers, Newports and Imperials, Dodge Monacos and Royal Monacos and Plymouth Gran Fury and Gran Fury Broughams.

NEW YORK — Samuel Bronfman II, kidnapped heir to the billion-dollar Seagram whisky fortune, was picked up in Brooklyn early today by FBI agents, NYC police said.

Bronfman, who was kidnapped eight days ago, was returned unharmed, according to a family spokesman.

A $4.5-million ransom was reportedly paid Saturday for Bronfman's release by his father, Edgar Bronfman, who spent the day cloistered in his Fifth Avenue penthouse waiting for his son's release.

Police would provide no further details on the release.

The FBI picked up Samuel in the middle-class Flatbush section of Brooklyn. The FBI went into a house there at exactly 4:20 a.m. to make the pickup.

Jonathan Rhinehart, a public relations consultant and Bronfman family friend, said, "We've got a nice boy coming home." He later said Samuel was at his father's apartment.

"I'm just absolutely delighted to report to you and to so many other fine people that Sam Bronfman has returned to his home this morning," Rhinehart said. "He's fine."

"The family is just absolutely delighted," Rhinehart said.

Later, it was reported he was under doctor's care, but Rhinehart repeated that Sam was in good condition.

Rhinehart refused to say which family members were with the youth.

When asked the family's reac-

QUINN said that California dealers, who sell more automobiles than those in any other state in the nation, would face the prospect of having their licenses revoked if they continued to sell the specified cars.

Quinn said all other domestic and foreign car manufacturers had met the standards.

A Chrysler spokesman in Detroit said the company had worked with and would continue to work with the California ARB on the "highly technical" issue of meeting state standards.

"Only a small number of cars are involved in this problem," he said. "We have developed tests and equipment methods we believe will resolve the issue and, upon receipt of ARB's approval, we will correct the problem."

Recession sparks depression, anxieties

By JOEL GREENBERG
Knight News Service

The recession is triggering a tremendous wave of depression, anxiety and other emotional upheaval.

Financially strapped people are flocking to mental health professionals with problems that might have been prevented by a weekly paycheck.

The incidence of "all major mental disorders has risen" during the past year — and much of it because of the economy, says Dr. M. Harvey Brenner, a sociologist at Johns Hopkins University and author of the book "Mental Illness and the Economy."

Suicide, homicide, child abuse, alcoholism (plus accompanying liver diseases) and heart disease mortality all appear to be rising. And much of it because of the country's economic decline, according to Brenner and other experts.

"In our culture, productive work is related to self-esteem," says Dr. Edith Lord, president of the Dade County, Fla., Psychological Association.

"To be locked out of the economic system is like the end of the world," Dr. Hazel Weidman, a University of Miami anthropologist, says.

And with the employment doors bolted for a burgeoning number of people, some signs of accompanying emotional instability are also beginning to arise.

Patient loads at 8 of every 10 community health centers in the U.S. have jumped by 50 to 60 per cent in the past year, according to National Institutes of Mental Health statistics.

Most experts agree that depression is on the rise, but some say it has reached "epidemic proportions."

Private clinics and psychiatrists say they are seeing more depressed patients, with many of the problems related to the economy.

Three "nasty" factors — inflation, unemployment and personal income loss — have combined to knock all kinds of people out of mental kilter, says Brenner, who is studying the U.S. economy-emotion relationship as it has evolved since 1900.

The elderly find it hard to cope with inflation on fixed incomes, he said. Similarly, the young and low-income earners are suffering from rising prices.

"But the most sensitive is the middle-aged married man," Brenner says. "He has a great responsibility to his family and is near the peak of his earning power."

"If he loses his job, he's too old to look forward to a long-term future and too young to retire," this type of person may be more prone to suicide or homicide than his fellow economic sufferers, Brenner says.

Examples of such hardships abound in the case files of mental health facilities:

A $17,000-a-year steel mill worker in Pittsburgh gave up his job and moved to Dade County, which doctors said would be a better environment for his wife's allergic condition. He secured work as a carpenter but lost the job when the construction industry slumped.

In a ratty, rented trailer, their dreams of the good life in Florida quickly faded. He turned to drinking, and his wife's patience, along with her allergies grew worse.

Diplomat's future in doubt for ransoming U.S. students

Combined News Services

The future of W. Beverly Carter Jr., U.S. ambassador to Tanzania who played a leading role in obtaining the release of three Stanford University students held by Zaire terrorists, is in doubt apparently because of a payment of ransom to the rebels.

Although State Department officials denied press reports Saturday that Carter had been fired or reprimanded by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, they would not deny that he was being transferred to a lesser job.

Department spokesman Robert Funseth refused comment on reports Carter would be reassigned to the United States Information Agency at a reduction of status and pay instead of being named ambassador to Denmark as planned.

"If you are asking if he has been fired, the answer is no. If you are asking if he has been reprimanded, the answer is no. He still continues as ambassador to Tanzania," Funseth said. Asked whether Carter was going to Denmark or the USIA, Funseth said, "We never comment on speculative reports on where an ambassador is going."

Funseth said, however, that it was not U.S. policy to pay ransom to kidnapers or terrorists to obtain release of Americans. Noting that stories concerning Carter's future centered on that policy, Funseth said, "It is very wrong in our judgment to characterize this policy in terms of those who want to save lives and those who do not."

Members of the congressional Black Caucus plan to question Kissinger about the matter Tuesday in a meeting here.

Carter received a message of congratulations from the State Department after the last of the students, kidnaped May 19, was released by the Zaire terrorists three weeks ago. Shortly after that message, however, Carter was summoned home and informed that Kissinger was not pleased.

Carter, 54, a former newspaper publisher, has been ambassador to Tanzania since 1972. Before that he was with the USIA in Kenya, served in Nigeria, and became deputy assistant secretary of State for African Affairs in 1969.

Press reports said he would be ranked a top-class information officer with an annual salary of $36,000. The ambassador to Denmark is paid $38,000 a year and receives allowances almost equal to the salary.

Snyder

Tom Snyder, host of NBC-TV's "Tomorrow" show, has been sued for divorce by his wife of 17 years.

Mary Ann Snyder, 39, filed a petition Friday in Los Angeles Superior Court through her attorney. She cited "irreconcilable differences."

Mrs. Snyder sought custody of their daughter, 10-year-old Ann Marie, and child and spousal support. She also asked the court to divide community property including a New York townhouse, a Beverly Hills home, pension and retirement benefits and various securities.

Mrs. Snyder claimed her monthly expenses were $5,787, including the cost of maintaining the family's Beverly Hills home. She said Snyder earns $10,000 a week as a television personality. In addition to his early morning talk show, Snyder, 39, is anchorman for a daily newscast in New York and for the "NBC Sunday Night News."

First miss

Actress Patty Duke remained hospitalized Saturday with an apparent virus illness that forced her to miss her first performance in 20 years of acting.

Her husband, John Astin, who costars with her in the play "My Fat Friend," told the audience at the Falmouth, Mass., Playhouse before Friday night's curtain that his wife had been hospitalized with a virus.

Catching up

Betty Ford is catching up on her rest but it "gets kind of hectic with people coming and going" all the time at President Ford's vacation home in Vail, Colo., a spokeswoman said Saturday.

Sheila Rabb Weidenfeld, the First Lady's press secretary, said Mrs. Ford "has been sitting in the sun" and has been on outings for lunch and to have her hair done at the Rocky Mountain ski resort.

The Fords are sharing a five-bedroom home at the foot of Vail Mountain with Mr. and Mrs. James Brown. Brown is vice president of the Thiokol Corp. in Utah, which manufactures motors for Minuteman missiles.

The Fords' daughter, Susan, 18, will join her parents here Sunday after completing her summer internship as a photographer with the Topeka Capital-Journal. The Fords' son, Jack, 23, also is in Vail with his parents and his girlfriend, Kristi Vail, who has lived in both Utah and Kansas.

Concentrating

Six members of a U.S. congressional delegation arrived in Japan Saturday from a 13-day tour of China, and Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., said China is concentrating on developing its economy rather than military buildup.

"The Chinese are placing a very high priority on their internal economic development," said Percy, leader of the delegation. "I have a feeling that defense is being de-emphasized. They seem to be relying more now on their militia as opposed to the regular Army."

Percy said the party met in Peking for more than four hours with Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-Ping, who runs the day-to-day affairs of the Chinese government.

Shriver

Sargent Shriver, who has been informally campaigning for president for some time, said Saturday night in Hyannisport, Mass., that he would make his campaign official in September.

Shriver made the announcement at a $100-a-plate cocktail party and buffet at the Kennedy compound attended by a number of the Kennedys and Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis.

Shriver ignored opposition from members of the Kennedy family, who felt his candidacy would draw too much attention to them, according to a source close to the family. However, Shriver said earlier this month in Atlanta that Rose Kennedy had contributed to his campaign and that Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., had urged him to run.

Shriver headed the Peace Corps under President John F. Kennedy and served as ambassador to France under former President Lyndon B. Johnson. He got the vice presidential nod in 1972 after Democratic presidential nominee Sen. George S. McGovern, D-S.D., dropped Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., as his running mate.

Sweetheart

George C. Wallace Jr., the country-music singer and son of Alabama's governor, Saturday married his high school sweetheart, the former Janice F. Culbertson of Montgomery.

The couple exchanged vows before 400 guests at the St. James Methodist Church in Montgomery, where they will live after a honeymoon.

The 23-year-old bride is art director for a Montgomery advertising agency. Wallace, 23, is a senior at Huntington College in Montgomery.

Jurist

Moshe Silberg, former president of Israel's supreme court and a leading authority on Jewish law, died Saturday, hospital officials announced in Jerusalem. He was 75.

A native of Lithuania, Silberg immigrated to Palestine in 1929. He served as supreme court justice until several years ago, when he resigned due to ill health. Silberg was also a professor of law at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

Partying

Former President Richard M. Nixon showed up at one of his favorite restaurants to have dinner and celebrate a birthday Saturday in San Juan Capistrano.

Nixon arrived at the El Adobe Restaurant accompanied by his wife, Pat; his daughter and son-in-law, Julie and David Eisenhower, and Col. Jack Brennan, the former president's personal aide. It was Brennan's birthday.

While Nixon was president, he frequently ate at the restaurant, located about 10 miles from his San Clemente home.

Just fine

British actress Glynis Johns scoffed at speculation Saturday over an illness earlier this week and told newsmen: "As you can see I'm still alive and kicking."

Miss Johns, 51, was taken to London's St. Stephen's Hospital on Wednesday suffering from what British newspapers called a "mystery illness." Hospital officials would not say what was wrong with her.

Navy maverick Zumwalt hopeful of ousting ByrdBy BEN A. FRANKLIN
New York Times Service

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — The retired admiral who brought long hair to the Navy, billeted women on ships of the line and gave a better break to black seamen during his widely publicized tour as chief of naval operations is cruising Virginia this summer and making waves on the otherwise calm political waters of Sen. Harry F. Byrd Jr.

Elmo R. Zumwalt Jr., the 54-year-old Navy "whiz kid" who at 44 was the youngest officer ever promoted to rear admiral and at 49 became the youngest chief naval officer, with four stars, was here "testing the water" Friday for a race next year against Byrd, the incumbent heir of one of this century's great, unbeatable, conservative political names. "The water is not as cold as I thought it might be," the admiral observed in an interview.

Byrd's father, the late Sen. Harry Flood Byrd, ruled Virginia politics — and often swayed the national government — until his retirement in 1965 from an impregnable redoubt called the "Byrd Organization" that took him from the Virginia governorship to a position of power for 32 years in the Senate. "Young Harry" Byrd, who is 60 now, inherited his father's seat first by appointment, and has since won two elections to hold it. Another is coming in 1976.

IN thinking the unthinkable about a campaign to unseat Byrd, the dashing long-haired admiral — a striking figure with beetling brows and generous gray sideburns — sees the odds as down from 100-to-1 a few months ago to 10-to-1 now, and heading toward 5-to-1. The Zumwalt temerity thus stems in part from a view he shares with other Virginia Democrats that the younger Byrd may be vulnerable.

Byrd, it is noted, has never won an election with more than about 53 per cent of the vote. This has been ample because Byrd quit the Democratic Party in his 1970 bid for reelection, avoiding a Democratic primary fight and dividing the regular party vote against him between the Democratic and Republican losers in the general election. He remains an independent.

But there appear to be other reasons than the problematical lure of victory behind the provisionally declared, but still unofficial, Zumwalt candidacy.

IN A "nonpolitical" speech here Thursday night to the Virginia Civil Defense Directors' Association — a performance typical of scores of hard-working weekend appearances he has made across Virginia in recent weeks — Zumwalt sought to picture himself, standing with arms folded a bit nervously across his chest, as less an office-seeker than as a man with an idea whose time has come, or needs to come.

"It is not whether or not it is possible to win," he said. "My hunch is that this is a very good time to put across a set of beliefs."

His main idea, he said, is that "insincere government" — an administration and a Congress which have failed to tell the American people the truth — have gulled the nation into a dangerously false sense of security, or any way insufficient fear, about two "critically dangerous" trends.

They are, first, the energy crisis and our dependence on Arab oil, which he believes is vulnerable to interruption not alone by the Arab governments but, in the end, potentially through direct or indirect control by the Soviet Union.

And second, the Nixon-Ford administrations' policy of détente with the Russians, which the admiral said Thursday night he would support "if it were real." Secretary of State Henry Kissinger is the main villain of Zumwalt's second complaint against "insincere government," with former President Richard M. Nixon not far behind.

"It is we who are accommodating and they who are demanding," he said of the Russians in his talk, calling détente "a policy we pretend to have with the Soviet Union while they remain the communists, bugging up the American economy by manipulations in the Middle East oil fields and building their military strength far beyond our own." Kissinger, Zumwalt said, has "used his power in frightening ways to crush dissent and criticism."

In Patty Hearst case

Informer admits lying to FBI

NEW YORK (UPI)—Walter J. Scott, a key FBI informant in the Patricia Hearst case, said Saturday that he was lying when he said he had seen the fugitive newspaper heiress twice and that his family helped harbor her.

Scott, meeting with a UPI reporter in a Manhattan hotel room, said he had been drinking while taking pain pills and was under pressure from the FBI when he told reporters in Philadelphia last Wednesday that he had seen Miss Hearst once at his parents' Las Vegas, Nev., apartment and again in New York City.

"I don't have the slightest idea if she's in the world or not," the 42-year-old ex-Marine said.

Saying he wished to set the record straight, Scott retracted virtually all of the earlier statements he made in the presence of four newsmen and an FBI agent in a Philadelphia hotel.

These included assertions that his brother, Jack, knew the whereabouts of Miss Hearst and had demanded up to $200,000 to turn her in; that his parents had driven her to the East Coast and that the 21-year-old fugitive's father, publisher Randolph A. Hearst, was somehow funneling his daughter money.

"I have no such knowledge," Walter Scott said when questioned on each of these earlier remarks.

In Washington, an FBI spokesman confirmed that Walter had walked away from the protective FBI custody he requested, but the spokesman refused all comment on Scott's other statements.

Jack Scott, a 33-year-old controversial sports figure, and his wife, Micki, have been subpoenaed to appear before a federal grand jury in Harrisburg, Pa., investigating allegations that Miss Hearst hid last summer at a Pennsylvania farmhouse they rented.

Their attorneys Friday filed a series of motions seeking to have the subpoenas quashed on the basis that the FBI had illegally used wiretaps, intercepted mail and harassed the Scotts and others during their probe.

During his three-hour interview with UPI, Walter Scott said several pressures were put upon him to cooperate with the FBI and he spent eight weeks virtually living with agents while moving from one hotel to another in Philadelphia and receiving an FBI subsistence allowance.

The first form of pressure came when he initially was contacted by agents in December 1974 and informed he was a prime suspect in the case, he said.

Later, he added, it was made clear to him that his government security clearance was in jeopardy, thereby affecting his chances of resuming work as a computer specialist with firms having certain federal contracts.

Walter said that at times during FBI interrogation he was "motivated by a desire to say the kind of things that I thought would be what they liked to hear."

"I was dependant upon the FBI," he said. "I wanted to say things that would give them reason to suspect that my value might be a little greater than it really was. Sometimes I would say things for that purpose."

"Many times I felt that they were making it incumbent upon me to fill in the inconsistencies and the vacancies in the scenario they were trying to develop and create," he said.

Walter said he was present when agents offered his father immunity and up to $200,000 for the Scott family's cooperation in the case.

Walter acknowledged that he had been periodically placed in mental institutions. "I was hospitalized twice in the last two years," he said, adding: "Both times I voluntarily committed myself because I was extremely depressed and for no other reasons."

"I was wrong; I made a mistake," he said, explaining why he requested the interview. "I don't like what the FBI is doing. I don't approve of it."

About the Philadelphia news conference, he said that he was not in a "normal frame of mind" because of drinking while faking medication. He said the FBI "requested, organized and orchestrated" the entire news conference.

Tired of paying rent, they buy town

GERLACH, Nev. (AP) — The citizens of Gerlach were tired and disgusted after paying land rent for the past half-century so they bought this tiny town for $18,000.

"Yeah, we just couldn't see paying all that rent and not actually owning anything," said Joe Ugalde, president of the Gerlach Leaseholders Association, which spearheaded the purchase from the Western Pacific Railroad. "We had only one choice — buy the town."

The final papers on the deal were signed last week.

For the $18,000, the leaseholders association got 219 acres of land where the town sits, and a water system that supplies this sun-parched area.

"It wasn't a bad price when you consider what the price of land is going for today," he said. "But really there's not much here. Come to think of it, that's a high price for just old flat alkaline dirt land."

Gerlach has a population of about 75 and is located about 100 miles north of Reno. It was founded, or created, by the railroad in 1909 as a watering stop for steam locomotives.

While many of the railroad's passengers headed west into California from points east, a few got off at Gerlach and made it their home.

The town thrived while the locomotives kept chugging through, but the chugging faded into history in the 1950s and so did many of the town's residents.

"Now I guess we've got about 75 people in the area, and you might have to count a dog or two to get the population that high," Ugalde said.

Most of the businesses went the way of the railroad.

Ugalde says there are two gas stations left, along with four bars, two restaurants, and his propane gas business located in his house.

Most people in the area are engaged in ranching or farming.

To buy food, residents have to go to Empire some six miles to the south. Population of the town: 200.

Actually, the leaseholders association is the legal owner of the town at this time. The association now plans to sell each of the residents the parcel of land they occupy at a price of about 3½ cents per square foot.

"From the profit the association makes on the land sale, we plan to improve the water system," Ugalde said.

"We're still going to run the town like we always did, with general association meetings, like town meetings back east," he said.

Mars-lander rescheduled

Viking launch this week

by HERB SHANNON
Aerospace Editor

Man's first search for life on another planet is scheduled to begin this week with the delayed launch of a 7,500-pound Viking spacecraft on a 440 million-mile voyage to Mars.

Twice rescheduled last week because of mechanical and electronic malfunctions, the first of two identical Viking vehicles is tentatively set to be lofted from Kennedy Space Center Wednesday, carrying a robot lander designed to touch down gently in the Martian dust on or about July 4 next year.

The second Mars probe is scheduled to leave earth early in September and arrive at its destination two months after the first.

The first launch was originally scheduled for last Monday, but technical problems forced delays. Finally, on Thursday, scientists decided to replace the Viking A spacecraft atop the rocket with the Viking B ship.

They tried to put the Viking B atop the rocket Friday, but were delayed by a malfunctioning door on a spacecraft assembly building.

Each Viking consists of two major parts - a 5,125-pound orbiter and a 2,375-pound lander. The combined spacecraft carries 12 highly complex instruments and a sophisticated radio system to perform a total of 13 experiments on the surface and in orbit.

Each lander carries nine instruments. They will analyze the Martian atmosphere during entry, and will perform biological, chemical, photographic, meteorological and geological experiments on the surface.

The primary mission of the billion-dollar National Aeronautics and Space Administration project is to determine if Mars is inhabited by living organisms, or if life existed earlier in the history of the planet. Even if no sign of current or previous life is found, scientists believe it is equally important to check Martian chemical processes to see if life could be evolving from inorganic compounds.

PREVIOUS investigation of Mars by orbiting Mariner spacecraft indicates that the harsh climate of the Red Planet, while relatively dry, cold and less favorable than that of earth, is not totally hostile to life forms.

Photos returned to the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena by Mariner 9 in 1972 disclosed that the cratered surface of Mars is laced by old riverbeds, suggesting that the planet at one time had a substantial supply of water in liquid form.

Designers of the Viking experiments believe the development of at least microorganisms during that period to be likely. The biology instrument built by TRW Systems of Redondo Beach for the Viking landers will scoop up samples of the Martian soil to test for evidence of these life forms, their remains and any possible evolution.

The previous Mariner explorations also have supplied most of the Martian data for planning the logistics of the Viking missions, including the selection of landing sites. The first Viking lander will touch down at the mouth of a wide valley which appears in high-altitude Mariner 9 photos to have carried running water at an earlier time.

THE experience with Mariner 9, which arrived in orbit around Mars during a dust storm which obscured the entire surface of the planet for weeks, dictated the Viking's improved capability of remaining in orbit for up to two months before separation of the lander.

Even if conditions are right when the first Viking slows into orbit around Mars, the spacecraft will be tracked from Pasadena for at least 10 days to ensure a precise landing. Since it will take 20 minutes for a radio signal to reach the orbiter and another 20 minutes for the response to return to earth, the landing sequence will be entirely automatic once the command is given.

While the orbiter vehicle circles the planet and acts as a message relay station between earth and the lander, the smaller spacecraft will separate, decelerate to drop from orbit and plunge toward the surface of Mars. At 20,000 feet altitude, a huge parachute will deploy to slow the lander's progress through the thin Martian atmosphere and retro-rockets will fire during the final 5,000 feet before the soft landing.

On the surface, the lander will immediately shut down all systems except those for the science operations. Soil collection experiments will be activated, analysis instruments will start working on the samples, two cameras will begin taking color and stereo photographs of the immediate and distant surroundings and a pair of nuclear-fueled generators will assure electrical power for at least 90 days of operations.

ALL OF the data collected will be relayed to the orbiter for transmission to earth. Meanwhile, the instruments aboard the orbiter will be conducting other experiments to provide information on the Martian gravity, mass, density and other physical characteristics, adding the results to the earthbound messages.

Like all the instrumentation aboard the Viking, the radio systems were designed to survive not only the long journey and the rigors of the Martian environment, but also a heat-treatment of 300 hours at temperatures of 257 degrees prior to launch to make sure Mars will not be contaminated by microorganisms from earth.

The Viking vehicles will be launched by a combination Titan III booster rocket built by Martin Marietta Corp. of Denver, the prime contractor on the program, and an upper-stage Centaur rocket built by General Dynamics Convair Division in San Diego.

Teamsters, UFW girding for last battle of ballots

By HENRY WEINSTEIN
N.Y. Times Service

DELANO — In this dusty agricultural town and others like it throughout the state, organizers of the United Farm Workers union and the Teamsters union are engaged in what may be their last battle to see who will represent the 250,000 field hands who harvest California's nearly $1 billion of crops each year.

Under provisions of the state's new Agricultural Labor Relations Act, farm workers can petition for secret ballot elections to choose which union — if any — they want, under state supervision. This is the first law of its kind in the country, and officials in Washington are watching closely to see how it works, with the hope that it might provide a national model.

FARM workers were specifically excluded from the National Labor Relations Act of 1936, as a result of lobbying by growers, and this resulted in a "law of the jungle" governing agricultural labor relations.

Now the state's growers — many of whom have seen their profit margins decline as a result of boycotts of their products — are looking forward to stabilizing a situation of strife they could not envision years ago when the pickers, largely migrants and many who could not speak English, were powerless.

Consumers who have either heeded or ignored the requests of Cesar Chavez, Farm Workers union president, not to buy grapes, iceberg lettuce or Gallo wines over the last 10 years are also concern-

The new law requires growers to bargain 'in good faith' with the chosen union, but there is no compulsion to sign a contract ed about the outcome. So are supermarket owners who have been confronted with pickets chanting "Viva la Huelga." (On With the Strike) since large numbers of Mexican-American and Filipino grape pickers walked out of the fields here 10 years ago, striking in the hopes of winning the dignity, rights and higher wages that had been so long denied them.

THE LAW goes into effect Aug. 28. It is anticipated that both the Farm Workers and the Teamsters will file thousands of signature cards from workers designating their respective unions as their desired bargaining agents and asking for elections at several hundred ranches.

To demand an election, a union must present a petition signed by a majority of the workers at the ranch during peak harvest time, a provision that insures migrant workers are present to participate. Other unions can then get on the ballot by presenting the signatures of 20 per cent of the workers.

The law provides that an election must be held within seven days after the initial petition is filed, and this could result in chaos, Gov. Edmund G.

Brown Jr., who was instrumental in getting the elections bill passed this spring, only appointed a board to administer the law a few weeks ago.

THE BOARD is trying to hire and train a staff of 75 persons to conduct elections as soon as Sept. 4.

The new law requires growers to bargain "in good faith" with the union chosen by the majority of workers, but there is no compulsion to sign a contract.

Chavez has predicted that his union will win back a large majority of contracts it lost to the Teamsters union in 1973. Louis Uribe, a Teamster organizer has said "We are very confident we will wind up with a majority of the contracts we have now," about 400 compared to 15 held by the Farm Workers. Over the last several years, many growers have said they preferred to deal with the Teamsters. Now the growers are publicly expressing no preference. Les Hubbard, spokesman for the Western Growers Association, said "both unions are subject to criticism on the administration of their contracts. Neither has had any long experience in dealing with field workers."

LABOR CONFRONTATIONS such as that pictured above, where Teamster and United Farm Workers union pickets hold rival demonstrations at San Francisco City Hall during consideration of a boycott resolution, or at left where UFW members picket a winery near Stockton, hopefully will move to the ballot box with the implementation of the state's new agricultural labor law.

Deputy, gunman killed in shootout

MADERA (AP) — A Madera man, apparently angered because his wife was leaving him, shot and killed a sheriff's deputy answering a family disturbance call Saturday, authorities said. Other officers fatally wounded the assailant later.

The dead deputy, Steve Lindbloom, 28, "didn't know what hit him," another deputy said. He said that Lindbloom was shot in the center of the forehead as he entered the rear of the combination grocery store residence.

Sheriff's deputies and police who rushed to the house traded gunshots and hit George Walker, 59, in the abdomen and chest areas.

Officers found his body when they entered the house 3 1/2 hours after the violence began. They said Walker apparently bled to death slowly.

Officers and Effie Evans gave this account: Walker's wife, Bernice, who had just recently left him, came to the house to get some clothes. When he wouldn't let her take them, she called officers. Two officers showed up at the front and a long gun was pointed at them. They left and radioed for help.

Lindbloom, a deputy for three years, and reserve deputies Bill Hughes and Steve Hagopian responded. Lindbloom was shot in the backyard.

After he was shot, Hughes and Hagopian traded shots with Walker and sustained minor wounds. Hughes was grazed in the hand, and the bullet ran up his arm and landed in his shirt pocket. Another bullet creased Hagopian's scalp.

Reports indicated Walker had a shotgun and other guns, including a derring-er.

Hughes was taken to a hospital for surgery. Hagopian's scalp was bandaged, and he returned to the scene at the north edge of this San Joaquin Valley farming community.

Bernice Walker and his nephew, Willie Evans, were in the house during the early shooting but escaped without incident later.

Effie Evans said she went to the house with two grandchildren and her own small daughter, not knowing the officer was dead at the rear of the house.

She said she found Walker lying on the floor with blood pouring from his wounds. It was unclear whether Mrs. Walker and Evans had left before Mrs. Evans arrived.

"I tried to talk him into giving himself up. He was lying there bleeding," Mrs. Evans said. "He told me, 'If you don't go on out, I'm going to shoot you too.'"

"I could tell in the condition he was in he would shoot the kids. And I had blood all over me from trying to help him."

Mrs. Evans then left with two of the children but somehow 2-year-old Marcel, one of her grandchildren, did not leave the house with her. Officers shouted at the boy to come out and he did without incident.

Officers fired tear gas into the building intermittently and finally, after learning that Walker was badly wounded and possibly dead, shot out every window in the building because the glare of the bright sun made it impossible to see inside.

Police and sheriff's Special Weapons and Tactics team officers crouched behind an armored truck that was pushed along side of the building and made their way in the back yard. They shot the door off and found Walker dead, said Sheriff Ed Bates.

Walker was owner of the grocery store. It's name: "The Last Chance Grocery."

Study bares housing lacks

United Press International
More than a quarter million households in the county are over-crowded, cost more than residents can afford and single persons over 65 years of age are the chief victims, a study showed Saturday.

The two-year research study conducted by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce concluded that up to 270,000 households in the county — including homes, apartments and house trailers — are probably substandard.

Robert Dockson, chamber president, said the study was aimed at providing data for the future development of low income housing units in the county.

He said the 270,000 housing units in question — representing 18 per cent of the housing total — were found to be either over-crowded or rent absorbing or both.

Dockson said the housing deficiencies were determined on the basis of "housing need" which exists if a family cannot obtain housing which is 25 per cent or less of its income. Housing also must provide living space equal to one room per person to be standard.

The study showed that 80 per cent of deficient housing involved single persons, mostly 65 years of age and older.

Beach weather due for rest of weekend

Associated Press
With fair skies and highs in the upper 70s, it was beach weather again in Southern California Saturday, and more of the same was expected through the rest of the weekend.

Late night and early morning low clouds are expected to burn off by midmorning in Los Angeles today, and the temperature is expected to be in the upper 70s.

In the intermediate and coastal valleys mostly fair skies are expected with highs near 85.

There will be some high cloudiness in the Southern California deserts, but it will be generally fair through the weekend, with winds up to 20 mph and temperatures in the 90s and 100s.

Crisis lurks in Kremlin's grain hunt

By WILLIAM L. RYAN

AP Special Correspondent

The world food situation probably is more precarious than it may seem to the average American, and in the new grain shopping expeditions of the Kremlin lurk the makings of crisis-proportion complications.

The U.S.S.R.'s market unpredictability makes it a recurrent major threat to the stability of world food supplies. Yet, while patently unwilling to cooperate with international efforts to cope with global supply problems, it is at the same time creating new problems.

Soviet failures, generated by a combination of bad weather and inefficient agriculture methods, send Moscow into the market in quest of huge amounts of wheat and feed grains. This raises again the somber question of the world's dependence, year to year, on harvests of a few countries. A disaster year for one major producer could mean calamity for hundreds of millions.

Some Americans involved in the war on world hunger, looking beyond the immediate impact of Soviet market activity on prices and inflation, see ahead frustrating complications in the global food picture that could produce crisis conditions.

The 1972 Soviet failure story is too recent to be forgotten. Sudden Russian purchases of 19 million tons of U.S. grains sent prices soaring and had heavy impact on long-term prospects for feeding hungry millions in poor countries.

Now, after another drought, the Russians are back, contracting for 9.8 million metric tons of U.S. grains plus four million more from other sources, all of which may be only about half what the U.S.S.R. needs to cope with the new crop shortfall.

The Agriculture Department wants to sell American grain and discounts highly publicized American fears that the sales will again drive up prices. But until September, anyway, the department asks exporters to observe a temporary ban on further sales to Russia, pending a report then on crop prospects.

There'll be much holding of breath until then. The department's August report disclosed that a spell of dry weather in key areas reduced production estimates for this year's corn.

West Europe, too, has had some unfavorable weather, and there has been some deterioration in Canadian and Australian prospects.

James P. Grant, president of the Overseas Development Council, a private organization concerned with such questions, says the global food situation remains "very precarious" because actually world food stocks are less now than a year ago when stocks were at the lowest level since World War II with respect to consumption.

This year's U.S. harvest is expected to be bigger than 1974 but short of the record proportions that had been projected in July. All this means keeping an eagle eye on crops next spring and summer, Grant says. Should there be a crop disaster then in a major producing country or should U.S. crops be well short of hopes, Americans still would have plenty for themselves, but the over-all situation would be bad.

First, food prices would soar and refuel the inflation process. Federal Reserve studies suggest that in 1973-74, rising food prices contributed to worldwide inflation about equally with the spiraling prices of petroleum. And because food is so basic there would be ample cause for alarm about the world picture.

There are already 400 million people in the world permanently hungry or near starvation. About 800 million, all told, in the "developing" nations suffer from malnutrition. Once again, this poor world now is highly vulnerable to possibilities inherent in a bad crop year.

The current situation suggests burgeoning problems. For example, the United States had committed $1.33 billion for fiscal 1976 for food aid and its shipment. Now that the Russians have come into the market with huge new orders, food prices are likely to rise and thus the tonnage that can be shipped for the money will be down, a blow in a nation where a citizen spends 80 percent of his income on food.

Only a few years ago the United States was the world's horn of plenty, its surpluses a cushion against disaster elsewhere, its Public Law 480 — originally the Food for Peace program — geared to channel help to hungry millions. In the 20 years up to 1972 the United States had given away something like $25 billion worth of food, apart from other such aid.

Now the massive Soviet purchases, the competition of other big nations for available supplies and the ever-growing populations of poor countries are factors signaling the end of the days of big American surpluses.

The world food conference in Rome last November had called for creation of a world food reserve system to guard against sudden disasters in major producing areas.

The United States and some other nations are committed to the principle of a world reserve system, but little progress has been noted toward setting it up. Such a mechanism, with governments buying surpluses, could mean farmers would be under less pressure to sell because they would be assured reasonable prices for their crops.

But so far as current U.S. crops are concerned, Soviet activities have darkened that outlook. With the American crop now projected to be less than was hoped for in July, the Russians again are suddenly in the market with huge orders, and no matter where they make up the rest of their deficit, there seems bound to be an impact on world food prices.

Public American figures have criticized the administration for failure to make grain sales conditional upon Soviet participation in a meaningful food reserve system. But the Russians, characteristically secretive about reporting crop conditions and prospects, are markedly uncooperative.

However, if the over-all picture is generally gloomy, organizations and individuals involved in the war on hunger see one singularly bright spot in what they perceive as a new alertness to the situation in the U.S. Congress, especially as indicated in the new International Development and Food Assistance Act. This has been reported out favorably and unanimously by the House International Relations Committee.

"The House committee has done a masterful job of translating into action all the rhetoric about the need for doing more on the world food front," says Grant.

The Interreligious Taskforce on U.S. Food Policy, an interdenominational group based in Washington, says it is happy with the bill on several counts: in that it aims to improve and increase food production in developing countries and "mandates changes in our assistance program which could assure a more forthcoming U.S. response to the world hunger crisis."

"It is a significant step forward," says Larry Min-ear of the Council.

World hunger experts have noted that much has been said on the U.S. official level about American intentions to combat threats of famine around the globe but not much had been done until this bill was reported out.

Hoffa case mystery man now missing

By DAVID SMOTHERS

DETROIT (UPI) — An alleged Detroit Mafia leader who has become the mystery man in the search for missing former Teamsters leader James R. Hoffa has also disappeared and police said Saturday they do not know where he is.

Michigan State Police Director George Halverson said law enforcement agencies could not "confirm or deny" reports on what has become of Anthony "Tony Jack" Giacalone since Hoffa's disappearance. Before he dropped from sight, the lean, ascetic-looking Giacalone indicated only a subpoena would compel him to say anything other than that he did not plan to and did not in fact meet Hoffa July 30.

"People don't know where he is," Halverson said. Another report that proved to be fruitless was that Hoffa may be buried in Osceola County in Northern Michigan, state and federal investigators said late Saturday.

Halverson dismissed as "no good...just another tip" a telephone alert to the FBI to search for Hoffa's body in a garage near Marion, Mich., about 175 miles northwest of Detroit.

State police and FBI agents searched the area Friday night.

Giacalone is an essential figure in the mystery because he is one of the three men the former Teamsters president told his family and friends he planned to meet when he set out for his last rendezvous at the Machus Red Fox Restaurant in suburban Bloomfield Township July 30.

SOURCES close to the case have said Giacalone "set Jimmy up" for whatever happened to Hoffa as he waited for his old friend in the Red Fox parking lot.

The Detroit News Saturday quoted federal sources as saying Giacalone — far from retiring to his new $165,000 condominium in Miami, Fla., as initially reported — was still hovering about the Detroit area, "flitting around like a butterfly."

But Halverson, who is in close touch with the investigation and is the first top policeman to say for the record he believes Hoffa has been killed, said, "We don't know whether he is in Florida or Michigan."

"I've checked with our people. We don't know where he is."

While the FBI in Detroit was officially noncommittal about Giacalone's whereabouts, an FBI spokesman in Washington said, "We do not have a warrant out for this guy and I do not see how we would be looking for him without a warrant."

On the other hand, federal sources here have indicated Giacalone will be one of the first men subpoenaed in a federal grand jury investigation of Hoffa's disappearance. Before he dropped from sight, the lean, ascetic-looking Giacalone indicated only a subpoena would compel him to say anything other than that he did not plan to and did not in fact meet Hoffa July 30.

THE LAST words heard from Hoffa were telephone calls to his wife and a friend demanding "where's Giacalone?"

Sources have said Giacalone, reputed boss of the Detroit crime syndicate and described by Hoffa's son as an associate of his father, arranged a meeting at the Red Fox between himself, Hoffa, East Coast Teamsters leader Anthony "Tony Pro" Provenzano, and Detroit labor consultant Leonard Schultz.

The meeting, it was reported, was dangled before Hoffa as a means to mediate a mounting dispute between him and Provenzano, a former jail-buddy at the Lewisburg, Pa., federal penitentiary who fell out with Hoffa during their prison days and threw in with Hoffa's arch-rival, Teamsters President Frank E. Fitzsimmons.

THE REV. George Cronin said Saturday he would lead his congregation at St. Joseph's Roman Catholic church in the town of Lake Orion, 40 miles from Detroit, in prayers for Hoffa, his sometime parishioner.

Hoffa was not a regular attendant at St. Joseph's — Father Cronin does not even know whether he is a Catholic — but Hoffa's wife, Josephine, attends mass regularly during the summer and was expected in church today.

"We will pray for him in the regular liturgy of the mass, the prayer to the faithful, in which we offer petitions for leaders of the church or the particular interests of the parishioners," the priest said.

"Mr. Hoffa was not a regular parishioner, but he would come here on festivals. Everybody trusted him and held him in respect and high esteem — nothing but respect."

ANTHONY GIACALONE

The FBI in Detroit officially refused to comment on whether it was tracing Giacalone's Michigan wanderings. A spokesman said, "If I did know, I couldn't say."

THE NEWS quoted federal sources as saying they had last heard of Giacalone "with some gambling friends" Thursday night in Flint, Mich.

"After the Hoffa thing went down he put the word out he was splitting for Florida, but he never left Michigan," the source was quoted.

"What we can't figure out is why he's staying back here where the heat is and, if he's sure of himself, why he's flitting around like a butterfly."

Hoffa's attorney son, James P., 34, raised some hackles by promising "whoever is guilty...is going to be punished, I can tell you that."

The warning, issued late Friday at the last of young Hoffa's over-the-fence news conferences at Lake Orion, might stir up Teamsters already aroused by Hoffa's disappearance and feared murder, some officials indicated.

Young Hoffa also said Teamsters in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana and elsewhere Saturday would start putting red white and black bumper stickers on their vehicles asking "Where is Jimmy Hoffa? If you know call 962-7297."

The number is connected to young Hoffa's Detroit law office.

'Reformers' leaving

UMW members restless again

By WAYNE SLATER

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (AP) — The face of the United Mine Workers union is changing once again.

Less than three years after Arnold Miller rode a reform campaign to the presidency of the UMW, three of his top-level staffers have resigned with indications of further switches ahead. And some union members are complaining that the reformers have turned into the establishment.

Miller's successful campaign for the presidency of the UMW in the winter of 1972 was largely the product of a handful of bright young idealists who were as different from the grizzled, rank-and-file as diamonds from West Virginia coal.

THEY had come to the reform movement by way of antipoverty programs and academic think-tanks, and they began instituting the most sweeping changes in the union's history.

However, within a little more than one month, three of them have left. The resignations include:

—Don Stillman, 29, the crusading editor of the United Mine Workers Journal: A product of Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism, Stillman is a former reporter for the Wall Street Journal and a former assistant professor at West Virginia University.

—Edgar James, 28, Miller's top administrative aide and a former fellow in history at Columbia University. He worked in the 1968 Robert F. Kennedy presidential campaign and then in the student-run Movement for a New Congress in 1970.

sel son of Joseph A. "Jock" Yablonski, the slain union insurgent.

Miller was not immediately available for comment on the changes.

"It is not the same anymore," said a union insider from West Virginia. "They are no longer the crusaders — they are the establishment. Their fights are petty now and the big battles are pretty much over."

The quality of Miller's leadership and the success of his administration have come under increased attack in recent months.

But dissident miners have complained that the new contract they approved in 1974 was not the same one that was finally signed. They have charged that some parts, including a Thanksgiving holiday pay provision, were excluded.

What they did get was an improved pension system, a pay raise with a cost-of-living clause and a sophisticated grievance procedure that is still too new to work smoothly in a rugged industry steeped in the tradition of the picket line.

The factionalism and union infighting surfaced last month when Vice President Mike Trbovich circulated a memo among the executive board criticizing the financial management of Miller and Secretary-Treasurer Harry Patrick.

JOSEPH YABLONSKI
"Young Idealist"
—AP Wirephoto

"It's an understandable feeling of the rank-and-file," Yablonski said of the disenchantment with the young staff. "But it's hard to find people who have 10 years of mining experience and an LL.B. I can understand their feelings."

Yablonski, who will enter private law practice in October, said he was making the break now because he has "become all-consumed by the UMW. Its problems have warped my perception of law and life."

"A lot of things that caused me to get into the drive to reform the UMW have been accomplished, not by me but by the coal miners and the staff," said Stillman, who will take a similar publicity post with the United Auto Workers.

"We have been through a series of contract negotiations, we have democratized the union, there is a positive ongoing safety program, organizing of nonunion coal, the right to elect district officials, a credit union. I can leave feeling in many ways I've accomplished something."

James, who will attend Harvard next month, sees the union in a state of flux where the huge gains and clear-cut goals of the early volunteers in the reformist movement have given way to the more tedious, day-to-day affairs of trade unionism.

"Power relationships are still in the role of being defined," he said. "You can't just look at the amount of factionalism in the union right now and see where it's going. I think in five years it will settle down."

The Miller-Trbovich schism had its beginnings at the Miners for Democracy convention of May 1972, a loose and free-wheeling affair largely managed by the young activists.

About 700 rebel miners selected Miller as their presidential candidate and Trbovich, who had assumed he would head the slate, had to settle for second place.

But if Miller won the office, he nevertheless lost the executive board, on which his opponents now outnumber his supporters by about 3-to-1. And with his staff beginning to leave, it is uncertain what the future of the union will be.

James said he sees "a certain mellowing" among the hierarchy.

"There's a new convention coming up and a district election, and they'll have to get ready for another contract negotiation in about 2½ years," he said. "This time around the waters will be a lot muddier."

Fitz question mark in Hoffa disappearance

to dealing with these officials, would have had to deal with Hoffa once again, according to these sources.

Hoffa and Fitzsimmons were close associates for nearly 30 years since their days in Detroit local 293. Hoffa retained the presidency of the international union when he went off to the federal penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa., leaving Fitzsimmons behind as caretaker. Then in 1971, in return for a presidential pardon, he gave up the presidency, and named Fitzsimmons to run in his place.

It was Hoffa's hope that once out of jail, he could seek re-election at the next union convention. But in commuting his sentence, then President Richard M. Nixon added a stipulation which barred Hoffa from participating in union affairs until 1980. Hoffa charged this was a conspiracy between Fitzsimmons and White House officials in exchange for Teamster support of Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign. Fitzsimmons has denied any involvement.

In the meantime, union observers say Fitzsimmons has become enamored with the trappings of power; the easy access to the White House during the Nixon years, flying around the country in a private jet, golfing with celebrities, and an annual income of $127,000, the highest of any union leader.

He spends a good deal of his time at La Costa, the plush country club in Southern California financed by the union pension fund loans. Some critics in the union say he would rather play golf than run the union.

The real power in the union, observers say, rests with Murray W. (Dusty)

Miller, the union's secretary-treasurer; Weldon Mathis, a vice president and one of Fitzsimmons' closest associates; and Ray Schoessling, the vice president in charge of the Central States Conference.

Following his election in 1971, Fitzsimmons "painstakingly and systematically" removed from office those officials above the local level who remained sympathetic to Hoffa and replaced them with his followers, union sources report.

This was to insure that even if Hoffa was successful in his legal battle to overturn the presidential restriction, he would stand little chance of regaining control at the union's 1976 convention in Las Vegas.

One example of Fitzsimmons' purge was Harold Gibbons of St. Louis, one of Hoffa's closest allies. He was ousted from both the presidency of his home local and Joint Council 13. He retained his vice presidential post with the international executive board, but his five-year term expires next year and he is unlikely to win re-election.

When Hoffa disappeared July 30 after telling friends he was planning to have lunch with a reputed Detroit Mafia leader, he was awaiting word from the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington, confident that the court would rule in his favor and allow him to get back into union affairs.

"Even though Hoffa had his failings, he would have won hands down if the vote was by the rank-and-file," said one union insider.

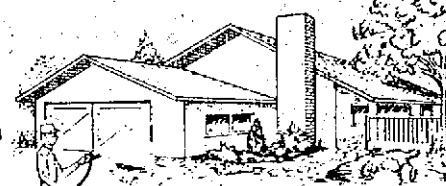

But the election is by the union's convention, and there is considerable doubt whether Hoffa could have swung the necessary support from the 2,000 delegates who now owe their allegiance to Fitzsimmons.

Mental ills and recession

Their marriage was saved by counseling at a clinic, and the husband eventually found another, lower-paying job.

Not all crises end so happily. Suicides have risen from 10 to 12 persons per 100,000 in the U.S. during the last two years, says an NIMH study.

To say that each trend is caused by the recession would be oversimplification, observers warn. "But during periods of great stress, we know that mental disorders go up — and this economic situation can certainly be called a great stress," Brenner says.

The sociologist said the current pattern is consistent with that in other periods of economic decline. And since a time lag is usually involved, the picture may not grow brighter for several more years, he suggested.

South Florida State Hospital officials say tight money is causing their patients to stay longer. "Until six months ago, we were getting increasing numbers of people out of the hospital, and now is spiraling the other way," said hospital Administration Thomas Reed.

Dr. Arthur T. Stillman, a psychiatrist with offices in Dade and Broward counties, says he is seeing "more depression" among his patients. "A man out of work who is used to taking care of his family's problems suddenly feels lost and doesn't know who he is."

In a recently published study in Psychology Today magazine, psychologists D.D. and B.M. Braginsky reported that many unemployed men and women consider themselves "surplus." Even after a new job is found, a layoff can cause "lasting changes in one's conception of society, self, friendship, ethics (and) family."

Lord notes that people are proud and maybe reluctant to accept a lesser job. "So many people are unemployed, yet the papers are full of want ads."

A more mature personality would accept the inferior job, rather than nothing, she says. "He rolls with the punches and fights back — apathy is a neurotic action that is self-defeating."

But because not only employment, but "successful" employment is so ingrained in our society, a layoff often means more than job loss, say the Braginskys.

"The impact on unemployment upon society is incalculable," they write. "The very ideals, beliefs and values that made this country a viable and strong democracy are being threatened."

"Unless we understand in human terms the meaning of being surplus, we are not meeting the threat."

Study says U.S. firms exploit weak laws

Latin drug labeling attacked

By ROBERT M. SMITH
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — A research study funded by Consumers Union has found evidence that multinational drug companies take advantage of a weaker regulatory situation in Latin America "to pursue labeling and advertising policies of a dangerous kind."

Specifically, the study found that the companies frequently minimize risks and exaggerate claims for their drugs in a way they cannot do in this country because of federal regulations.

According to the study, for the sake of sales volume, the drug manufacturers:

— "Will recommend the same drug for a much wider variety of conditions in Latin America than they are permitted to do in the United States."

— "Include in a drug's Latin American labeling only incomplete or modified versions of necessary restrictions in spite of the critical importance of warning doctors, pharmacists and patients about these special dangers."

— Sometimes sell "products that have caused serious or even fatal adverse reactions in Latin America as though they were completely safe."

— In at least one case, recommend a higher dose age of a drug than is recommended in the United States.

EXCLUSIVE

United States. While they may nominally also require a prescription in Latin America, the study says they are in practice widely sold without a prescription and the drug companies are aware of this.

It is this direct availability to the consumer, the study contends, that makes labeling and advertising all the more important.

The research comes in the wake of a statement by Dr. Halldan T. Mahler, director-general of the World Health Organization, last April that "drugs not authorized for sale in the country of origin... are sometimes exported and marketed in developing countries; other drugs are promoted and advertised in those countries for (illnesses) that are not approved by the regulatory agencies of the countries of origin."

ELEVEN of the drug manufacturers named had a variety of reactions. Basically, however, the manufacturers emphasized that they obey labeling requirements in the countries in which they operate and that those requirements may be more appropriate for those countries than standards established for the United States by the Food and Drug Administration.

As the Bristol-Myers company put it, "The practice of medicine in the United States is not necessarily regarded as the benchmark of medicine throughout the world, nor should it be."

Among the other American companies named were Winthrop Products, Inc., a subsidiary of Sterling Drug; E.R. Squibb & Sons, and G.D. Searle and Co.

The draft manuscript, provided to the New York Times by its author, Robert J. Ledogar, was prepared under a grant from Consumers Union, the consumer organization. Research for it was begun in the fall of 1973, and the writing was completed early this year.

Following are some examples, taken from the manuscript, contrasting information provided with drugs in Latin America with information about the same drug that may be given in the United States. The study also compares some promotional claims made for the drugs in Latin America with restrictions on the drugs in the United States.

WINSTROL—Manufactured by Winthrop Products, inc., a subsidiary of Sterling Drug. According to the study, Winstrol "is a synthetic derivative of testosterone, the male sex hormone. In the United States, Winstrol is considered too toxic for all but the narrowest (uses)."

The study says the American Medical Association warns that drugs like Winstrol "should not be used to stimulate growth in children who are small but otherwise normal and healthy."

"In Latin America," the study says, "Winthrop promotes the drug widely as... an appetite stimulant for underweight children." It says that a two-page advertisement for Winstrol compound in a Mexican medical journal in July, 1972, recommended the drug if a youngster "Complains of poor appetite, fatigue or weight loss."

According to the study, boxes of Winstrol tablets bought in Brazil in 1973 and 1974 say that "in states of appetite loss and malnutrition" Winstrol "stimulates appetite" and improves protein build-up.

Asked to comment, Winthrop said, "Winthrop Products' advertising and labeling are fully in accord with all laws and good medical practices in each nation where the company operates. Another country's medical practices and regulations cannot be said to be wrong simply because they differ from those in the U.S."

NETOCYD—The study identifies this as a Pfizer, Inc. brand name for dithiazanine iodide.

Because of its hazards, the manuscript says, Eli Lilly and Co. discontinued marketing this drug in the United States in 1967 and Pfizer, "presented with new labeling requirements" by the FDA, "decided to stop marketing (the drug) in areas under FDA jurisdiction."

A bottle of Netocyd tablets bought in Panama in July, 1973 the study reports, described the drug as "a significant advance in the treatment of the most common kinds of parasitic infestation" and did not "attempt to restrict Netocyd's use to severe or life-threatening infestations."

Arsenal poisons held peril

DENVER (AP) — Two types of poisonous substances manufactured at the Rocky Mountain Arsenal are so dangerous that their production there must be stopped, Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., said Saturday.

"Today I register my strongest protest against the use of Rocky Mountain Arsenal for two activities that pose nearly as great a public health and safety hazard as nerve gas," Hart said at a news conference.

The senator said the "first and most dangerous" is the arsenal facility for blending rocket fuel using two compounds of a chemical called liquid hydrazine.

"While useful in rockets, hydrazine is extremely toxic to humans," Hart said. He added that small quantities can cause serious burns, convulsions, permanent damage to the liver and other organs, and cancer. It can also be fatal, he said. The second danger is allegedly posed by a large pesticide plant operated by Shell Oil Co. on the arsenal grounds, Hart said. Among the products produced at the plant are organophosphate pesticides.

Hart said those substances can destroy the central nervous system, having "the same effect on humans as nerve gas."

Arsenal officials could not be reached for comment. A Defense Department spokesman said he has not seen Hart's statement and has no comment on the allegations. However, he confirmed that the Army makes the rocket fuel for the Air Force.

The Army has discontinued producing nerve gas at the arsenal, which is located just north of Denver, and Army specialists are currently destroying the gas now stored at the arsenal.

Black death—rooted in New Mexico

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (UPI)—Bubonic plague—the dread Black Death that killed half the population of Europe in the Middle Ages—may reach record proportions in New Mexico this year.

Seven cases have been reported in that state so far this year, the same number as 1974 and two fewer than the record year of 1970, when nine were confirmed. One of this year's cases resulted in the death of a 3-year-old Navajo Indian girl, Charlene Brown.

Since 1949, there have been 51 cases of the plague reported in the state, nine resulting in death.

For complex reasons, the plague has found a long and probably permanent home in the state, known as "The Land of Enchantment," according to New Mexico epidemiologist Jonathan Mann.

"From what is known, it has probably been present since before written history," Mann says. "I imagine it has always been present in New Mexico."

The plague became known as the Black Death apparently because of the skin color of its dying victims, following an outbreak that killed 25 million persons in Europe in the 1300s. The plague also killed 13 million in China in the same century.

New Mexico is not the only state with the plague, but it has the most reported cases. Other fatalities have been recorded in California and Colorado and infections reported in Utah and Arizona.

Health officials say part of the reason New Mexico has a relatively high incidence of reported cases is because physicians are more aware of it and the state has a superior reporting system.

But it is a fact that the plague is endemic, or prevalent, in New Mexico.

Gas hike of 3 cents forecast

VAIL, Colo. (AP) — President Ford's economic and energy advisers said Saturday that the price of a gallon of gasoline will rise "roughly three cents" with the twin removal of price controls on domestic oil and the $2-a-barrel tariff on imported oil.

The President announced Friday that he will veto a bill extending oil price controls and will lift the import fee if Congress upholds his veto.

Energy administrator Frank G. Zarb and economic adviser Alan Greenspan said if the program is enacted there would be no immediate sharp rise in the price of gasoline. Instead, he said, the increase would come over a period of one to nine months.

ZARB predicted that Congress would sustain the President's veto, expected late this month after Ford returns from his Vail vacation.

"I left Washington with the feeling that we had the sufficient strength to sustain the veto," Zarb said.

Greenspan said, "I cannot conceive of Congress not passing a windfall-profits tax or a rebate to consumers," which are part of the President's overall energy program.

The two advisers based the three-cent estimate on the fact that the decontrol of domestic oil would increase the price an estimated six cents a gallon while the removal of the import tariff would decrease it by three cents.

Greenspan, asked to assess the nation's present economic situation, replied:

"I can best describe it as in the early stages of recovery. We've seen a considerably favorable set of statistics in recent weeks that suggest we are on the way up."

GREENSPAN said economic experts are "somewhat disturbed by a little blip in the wholesale price index for July," but he said they don't read the statistics as an indication of a re-emergence of inflationary pressures.

The basic data points to a firm and solid recovery through this year and next with the trend of the unemployment rate moving down," Greenspan said.

He listed several positive economic signs, including a declining unemployment rate, an increase in industrial production of approximately 1 per cent, a major increase in personal income and retail sales and an increase in new industrial orders.

Asked if the President planned to apply pressure to keep major oil companies from squeezing out small independent operators, and to keep prices in line, Zarb said, "The Justice Department has said that a jawboning exercise has in it some antitrust implications."

X-ray emissions from space puzzling scientists

By WALTER SULLIVAN
New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Far out in the constellation Orion something catastrophic is occurring. While the nature of the phenomenon is unknown, it has generated X-ray emissions that in recent days have reached an intensity five times greater than any ever observed in the heavens.

Observatories in many parts of the world have been alerted and are trying to locate the source optically or observe it at radio wavelengths.

The original observation was made two weeks ago by the British satellite Ariel 5, launched into earth orbit last October from the Italian space launching platform in the sea off Kenya. At the time the X-ray emissions were weak. Their intensity, however, has since increased rapidly.

The emissions have been recorded by SAS-3, the Small Astronomy Satellite launched from the same platform a few months ago. At the Massachusetts Institute of Technology center, where a continuous watch is being kept on data from SAS-3, Dr. Terry Matilsky said that when the emissions were first observed, "we couldn't believe it."

It was assumed they came from the sun, which recently has been active and emitting X-ray.

As initially recorded by SAS-3, which is operated by the Goddard Space Flight Center of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the emissions were only half as intense as those from SCO X-1, the X-ray source in the constellation Scorpius long regarded as the most intense in the sky. Five days ago, however, they had become five times more intense than that source and since then have remained "fairly constant," Matilsky said.

With SAS-3, it has been possible to pinpoint their location in the sky. With this clue as to the location, it is hoped that optical and radio telescopes can see what is going on there.

About a dozen "transient events," or surges of X-ray emission, have been observed since earth satellites made them possible. The most popular explanation is that the emissions occur where an extremely dense object such as a star formed chiefly of neutrons, is circling a normal but very large star.

In some cases the dense object may be a "black hole" — so dense that its gravity prevents its emission of light. The X-rays would be emitted by masses of material falling from the large star toward its dense companion and being heated to extremely high temperatures.

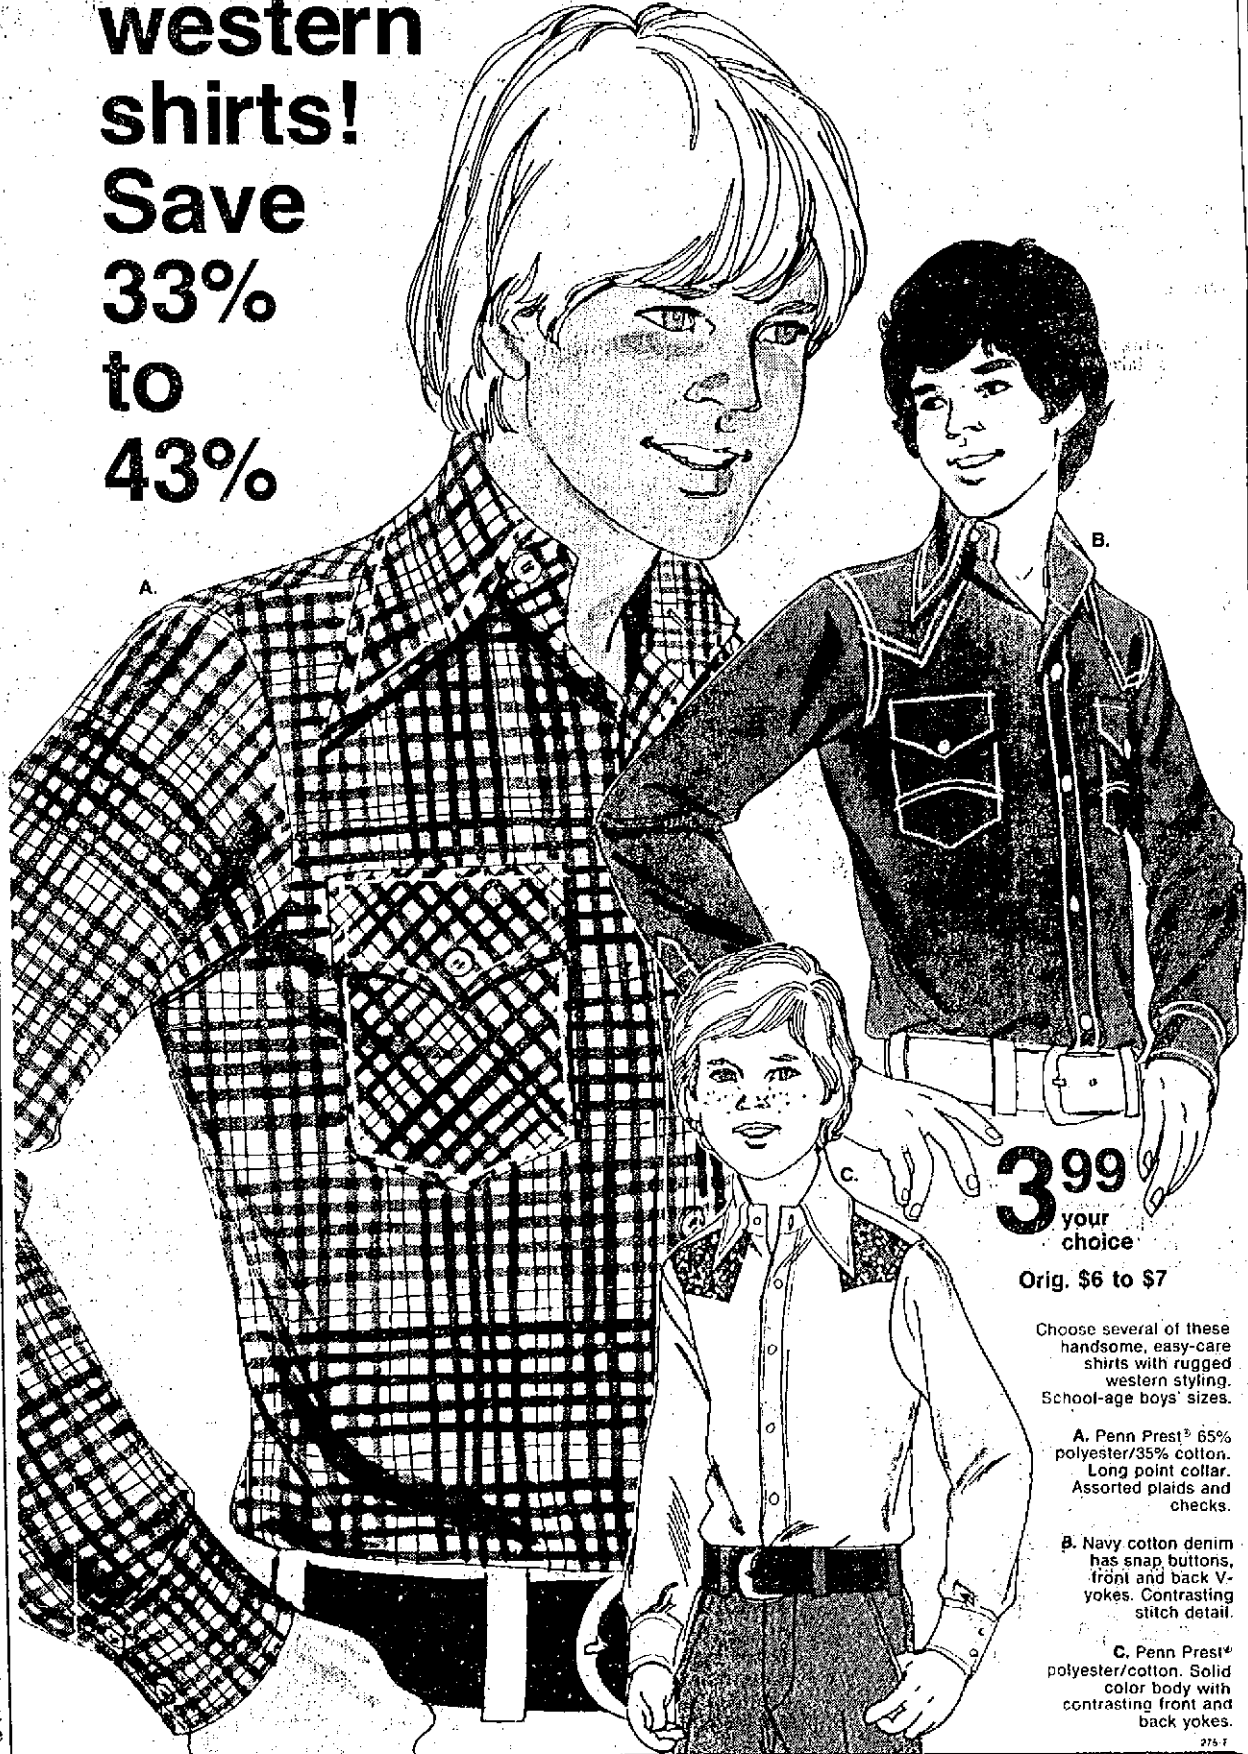

Evidence for such a situation would consist of rhythmic fluctuations in the X-ray emissions or in wavelengths of light from the star as the two objects circle one another. While such fluctuations have been observed in other X-ray sources, they have not as yet been detected in this one.

It is hoped that this may become possible if the star can be observed optically.

Another possible source of X-ray emissions such as these — more powerful than any ever seen — would be a nearby star explosion or supernova. While such a sudden appearance of an extremely brilliant star has been recorded in ancient records, none has been observed in modern times.

Just to make sure a supernova had not suddenly appeared Matilsky went out at 4 a.m. a few nights ago to watch Orion rising in the East. None was to be seen.

New Bangladesh regime begins split with India

By WILLIAM BORDERS
New York Times Service

CALCUTTA — The new government of Bangladesh moved Saturday to take the country out of the political orbit of India, which has been its closest ally and protector.

Meanwhile, the Indian government, in its first reaction to the military coup which ousted the government of Sheikh Mujibur Rahman declared that it "cannot remain unaffected by these political developments in a neighboring country."

Rahman was buried Saturday in his home village with "full honors," Radio Bangladesh said.

The government of India is carefully studying reports of recent events in Bangladesh, and watching developments, a government spokesman said in New Delhi. "We are deeply grieved by the tragic death of Sheikh Mujibur Rahman. We held him in high esteem in India as one of the outstanding personalities of our time."

The Indian government's tribute to Sheikh Mujib said that he had "led the national struggle for liberation with steadfastness and courage."

"THE PEOPLE of India are committed to a vision of cooperation and friendship among the countries of the subcontinent," it continued. "We shall continue to strive for the achievement of this ideal."

In several broadcasts a day after the coup, Bangladesh Radio stressed the common cause of the world's Islamic countries and referred in a friendly way to Pakistan, the first country to grant diplomatic recognition to the new regime.

It also promised to "normalize relations in the subcontinent," which has been politically dominated by India ever since Pakistan split into two parts — one of them Bangladesh — after the war of 1971.

In the second day of the government of President Khondakar Mushtaque Ahmed, who had been Sheikh Mujib's commerce minister, Bangladesh remained cut off from the rest of the world, its borders closed and most of its lines of international communications stifled.

BUT ACCORDING to the government radio, and reports filtering out through other channels, a general calm prevailed in Bangladesh, a swampy and impoverished country the size of the state of Wisconsin, with a population of 75 million.

In Dacca, the capital, 150 miles northeast of here, soldiers were patrolling the streets, and some tanks were said to have been in evidence. But the gunfire that was heard sporadically Friday had subsided.

The 24-hour curfew imposed in the predawn coup was lifted for a few hours Saturday morning, the radio said, to permit people to shop. Then it was reimposed.

Another report from Dacca, a primitive city infested with squalid slums, said that during the break in the curfew, the streets had been filled with the usual crowds, including itinerant merchants and barefoot children begging.

THE government radio also said that President Mushtaque Ahmed had met his new cabinet Saturday morning and, in a review of the general situation in the country, found it "satisfactory."

On this side of the border, the chief secretary to the government of West Bengal, the Indian state of which Calcutta is the capital, said that the border area was "quite normal and quiet."

According to Dacca Radio, Pakistan, as a gesture of friendship, offered Bangladesh 50,000 tons of grain and 15 million yards of fabric.

As the radio announced appointments to the new government, between selection of martial music and various speeches pledging support to the new president, observers of the situation noted that many of the people known to be pro-Indian were not mentioned.

"REMEMBER that 80 or 90 per cent of the people in Bangladesh are anti-Indian," one well-informed observer said.

According to this source, Mushtaque Ahmed, a very religious man, has a reputation of austerity and honesty, and is regarded as likely to lead a vigorous campaign against the corruption that the new government says was rampant under Sheikh Mujib.

Bangladesh, which has one of the world's most hopeless economic situation, has slid and drifted in its three and one half years of independence, not only because of what the new government sees as misadministration, but also because of the soaring population, which tends to offset any advance, and because of natural calamity.

Any move away from the New Delhi government and toward the Pakistanis now would be expected to cause grave concern to the government of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, especially with India in the midst of an internal political crisis of its own.

PREMIER BHUTTO

Significantly, Premier Zulfikar Ali Bhutto of Pakistan, announcing his government's unexpected diplomatic move, referred to "the Islamic Republic of Bangladesh." Sheikh Mujib had named it "the People's Republic of Bangladesh."

And the Bangladesh Radio, proudly announcing the diplomatic development, also reported that Pakistan had appealed to "Islamic and third world" countries to join in the recognition.

Peron target in fund-switch probe

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The Argentine congress is expected to probe press reports that President Isabel Peron transferred $1 million from a charitable agency's bank account to her late husband's estate, congressional sources said Saturday.

Members of the largest opposition party, the Centrist Radical Civic Party, are considering calling a special session of congress next week to question the newly appointed interior minister, Col. Vicente Damasco, about the reports, the sources said.

THE newspaper accounts said Mrs. Peron blamed Damasco's predecessor, Antonio J. Benitez, for the episode. Benitez cannot be summoned for questioning because he is no longer in office, the sources said.

The legislators are "deeply concerned" about the political implications of the report at a time when Mrs. Peron's government is beset by economic and political turmoil.

They are also concerned by the lack of official response to newspaper reports of the alleged transfer, the sources said. They said Mrs. Peron has privately denounced the reports as a "maneuver to damage me politically."

Peronist legislators who make up the majority in congress would not comment on the possibility of a congressional investigation.

According to the newspaper, La Prensa, Mrs. Peron signed the check July 23 drawn against the account of the Justicialist

Heavy fighting rages in Angola's main port

LUANDA, Angola (AP) — Heavy fighting raged Saturday in Lobito, Angola's main port previously said to be controlled by a Soviet-backed liberation movement.

"Everyone is racing to a nearby peninsula to get away, a radio ham operator in Lobito, 350 miles south of Luanda, said.

"They are using motor, sailing and fishing boats. It's another Dunkirk," a reference to the French port that 300,000 Allied troops were evacuated from in World War II.

The radio ham said mortar shells and rockets were landing in the center of town, sending people fleeing to the peninsula without food or water.

Elsewhere: The Austrian Press Agency said that Angola's agriculture minister, Mateus Neto, was kidnapped in Luanda on Friday. There was no confirmation from any other source.

Portuguese sources said South African troops had entered Angola in the border region of Cunene to protect a river dam project there.

On Friday, the Soviet-assisted Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) claimed to have controlled Lobito after fighting off two rival groups, the Chinese-backed National Front for the Liberation of Angola (FNLA) and the Independent Union for the Total Liberation of Angola (UNITA).

New violence in Belfast escalates

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI) — A bomb thrown from a passing car Saturday wrecked a house owned by Roman Catholics and badly damaged another in a North Belfast neighborhood.

The families living in the Rosapenna Street houses were not at home, but the blast slightly injured three passersby. The front wall of one of the houses in the mixed Protestant-Catholic district ballooned outward and the roof caved in.

IN ANOTHER incident, authorities found four young men tied to a railing in the town of Crossmaglen, 45 miles southwest of Belfast on the Irish Republican border. One of the four had the word "rapist" painted on his chest.

A placard placed nearby said the outlawed Provisional Wing of the Catholic-backed Irish Republican Army had punished the four for criminal activities in the community.

The four men refused to discuss the incident except to say six masked gunmen had abducted them, but had not beaten them during questioning.

Sectarian violence in the embattled province has claimed 13 lives in the past week alone and threatened the shaky six-month-old IRA cease-fire.

Merlyn Rees, secretary of state for Northern Ireland and Britain's top official in the province, cut short a vacation and returned to Belfast in an effort to cool the situation.

Police identified a dead man found near the Irish Republican border as John Meeklin, a 25-year-old Protestant storekeeper kidnapped by the IRA Wednesday.

BRITISH troops avoided touching the body until they made sure it had not been booby-trapped, an often-used IRA tactic that has cost the lives of scores of police and troops in the past.

Uneasy over Lisbon regime Azores eyes bid for freedom

By FLORA LEWIS
New York Times Service
PONTA DEL GADA, Azores — There are 300,000 people on these Portuguese islands, which lie between New York and Lisbon in the North Atlantic and almost every one of them has a relative in the United States.

There are almost twice as many Azoreans in the United States and Canada as there are here, and the fear that a Communist government in Lisbon might force these islands to break their ties with the U.S. and close the big American military base at Lajes on the island of Terceira has spurred talk of independence from Portugal, which has ruled the Azores for the last 400 years.

THERE have been a few scuffles and incidents, but so far the independence movement has just been talk. The talk has been so insistent, however, that the Lisbon government has started making some concessions to the islanders.

It announced an investment credit of $12.5 million, and more important, an Azores-wide governing commission called the General Junta. In the 400 years that the nine-island archipelago has been settled, Lisbon has always ruled through three separate administrative regions which kept Azoreans apart but tied tightly to mainland Portugal.

Welcome as the news brought back from Lisbon Friday night by Military Governor Altino Pinto do Magalhães is, it is doubtful that it will quell the mounting discontent he had gone home to report.

"Everybody is uneasy, waiting to see what will happen," said a merchant,

"but people care less and less about what happens on the continent. People are getting much more chauvinist about being Azoreans. There's a common feeling among all the islands now, instead of the old rivalries," he said.

Though he spoke freely, as people here do, he did not want to be identified. He is one of the 28 people who were wakened in the middle of the night and sent to prison on the island of Terceira after a demonstration which prevented the return of the new left-wing civil governor June 6. All have since been released, without charges. "I'm not afraid of prison," the merchant said. "But I want to stay where I can continue trying to get something done."

Everybody here knows about the clandestine independence movement called FLA, but nobody will name its leaders and few will admit to membership even in confidence. The issue is intense. Some, like Socialist leader Dr. Silvano Neves Pereira, say they would prefer more autonomy providing there is not a definitive Communist takeover "on the continent." It is "a natural hypothesis," he said, that Socialist Party chief Mario Soares and other mainland moderates might come here to set up a ramp government.

Twice before in their history the islands have served as a jumping-off point for a change of rule in Lisbon, and there is some thought now of creating a status comparable to the one Chiang Kai-shek set up on Taiwan when he fled China a generation ago.

"They are thinking of it in Lisbon, but it wouldn't be popular here. The people wouldn't accept," said Joao Mota Amaral, who was elected a deputy to the constituent assembly in Lisbon in April.

Amaral is one of five Popular Democratic party deputies and the sixth Azorean is a socialist. His party won 62 per cent of the Azorean vote, and the Socialists won 20 per cent. The Communists received less than 2 per cent and the remainder was sprinkled among minor parties at the right and left ends of the political spectrum.

Amaral, 32, and Americo Viveiros, 25, another deputy, make it clear, without quite saying so, that they have already opted for independence. The question is not whether but when.

THE timing, they said, depends on three factors. One is the developments in Portugal, because that will "determine the international reaction and acceptability of Azorean independence. We can't go to the United Nations like Guinea-Bissau and Mozambique and ask for independence," Amaral said. "They wouldn't give us a hearing. We have to decide and do it first, and then ask for admission."

The second factor was said to be the solution of financial, currency, and similar problems involved in cutting loose from Lisbon, which has always maintained rigid centralized control of the islands' economy and budget. And the third, according to the deputies, is the need for a "clean political line because we will have to have a liberal democracy with social reform. We wouldn't accept the old right or (ex-president Gen. Antonio de) Spínola," now exiled in Brazil.

Unrest shatters image of China's orderliness

Knight News Service

WASHINGTON — The political unrest in Chekiang Province, which has jolted the growing image of China as a model of orderliness, is seen by China watchers as a local power struggle going back to the cultural revolution of the late 1960s.

For the last several weeks, China Radio has broadcast daily reports of thousands of troops being ordered into rural areas of the coastal province and into the silk and chemical factories of its capital, the well-known resort town of Hangchow.

Not since the cultural revolution has the military been used on such a scale. Army, navy, and air force units are participating, their total numbers reaching perhaps as high as 20,000.

The unusual candor of the reporting was given a rare look behind the portrait of Mao's millions as a uniformly hard-working people, content with a diet of ideological debate and adequate food. This picture of China has built up from a stream of reportage since President Nixon's 1972 visit.

PHOTOGRAPHS show swept streets dotted with tranquil cyclists. Foreign correspondents tell how political figures "purged" during the cultural revolution reappear and take up high posts. China watchers describe the dissipation of hostile feelings in public criticism of Confucius, the ancient philosopher, and Lin Biao, the military leader who was accused of plotting Mao's downfall.

These portrayals are a pleasing contrast with the old China of prostitution and opium dens. And they show a maturing in the People's Republic from the mass extermination campaign of the early 1950s, in which the slaughter of landowners and other "class enemies" may well have reached into the millions, and from the violent excesses of the cultural revolution.

Only rarely has an undercurrent of dissent surfaced in the last three years. A year ago wall posters appeared in Peking claiming more than 200 persons were massacred in recent years in China's southeastern Kiangsi Province.

Another poster display told of strikes last year by demobilized servicemen involved in a pension dispute with the government.

Reporting of these incidents depends heavily on foreign travelers. And visits by foreigners can be curtailed in disturbed areas, as happened last month in Chekiang province. Diplomats have been denied travel rights to Chekiang and Hangchow, although some tourists still may go there.

THE PUBLIC reporting by Chinese radio is part of an effort by leaders in Peking to bring under control the most troubled of China's provinces. Since the cultural revolution, reports of persistent street fighting, black markets, official corruption, and strikes in Chekiang have filtered out to the West.

According to China experts, no single faction won out in the power struggles of the cultural revolution. Personal grudges and opportunism continued unresolved in Chekiang Province.

Peking, meanwhile, was immersed in its own power struggles. The civilian leadership, split among itself, tried to nudge aside the military which had assumed great powers during the disorder of the late 1960s.

A major turning point came this year when Chou En-lai won solid backing for his program of moderate economic reform at the National People's Congress in January. His platform called for unity, stability, and production. Chekiang Province was a natural target, on all three counts.

Past efforts by Peking had failed. The military leadership had been changed. A civilian, Tan Chi-lung, had been placed in overall charge. The militia had been strengthened.

But the military continued to squabble among army, air force and navy factions. Tan was an outsider who lacked a political base. And the militia began shooting each other.

So on July 19, an initial detachment of 8,000 soldiers was sent into at least 13 factories in Hangchow. Several times that number followed over the next several days.

CHINA RADIO blamed "bourgeois factionism" and the "counterrevolutionary revisionist line" as well as sabotage "by a handful of class enemies" for the troubles.

According to China radio, the military has helped with production, repaired buildings, helped prepare food, given haircuts, laundered clothes and given workers medical treatment.

Friday a provincial broadcast from China reported that factional fighting and other disturbances had broken out in the Manchurian province of Heilongjiang. There was no indication whether the use of military troops was being considered, but the broadcast said stern action was necessary.

The army often performed domestic services like that after the cultural revolution. But that trend had been reversed until the Hangchow event by the reassertion of civilian leadership.

American analysts don't know whether Hangchow is a sign of weakness or strength by Peking. Sending in troops may be a last resort or a clever double-use of manpower.

All they really know is the affair is interesting by its very existence, as are dissidents in the Soviet Union.

were all very happy to join in the work."

Thiet said he was allowed to return home after getting three "excellent" marks in daily tests and one in a weekly test.

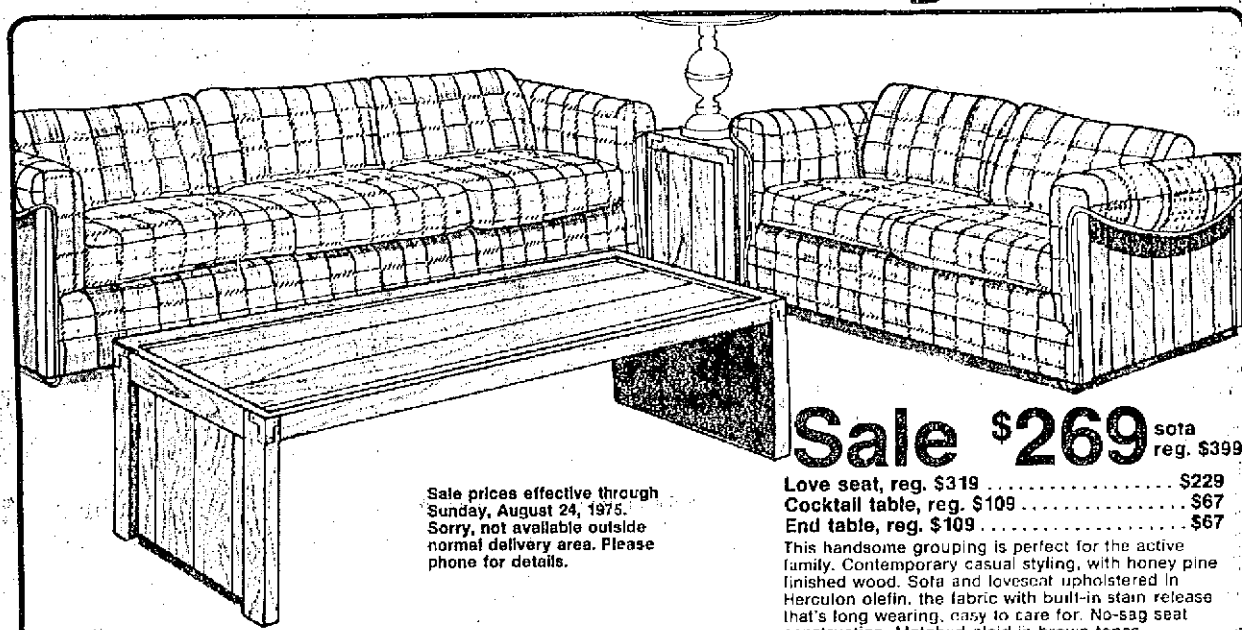

All those interviewed said they had been well fed.

International Red Cross workers Friday told former U.S. Embassy guards they would get in touch with Washington to get back pay still owed the men by the Americans.

About 1,400 guards contend they are owed $600 each in back pay and termination pay.

They identified Steven B. Bray, chief of the U.S. Mission Warden Office, as the official who allegedly left without paying his employees.

Viet officers 'reeducated'

SAIGON, South Vietnam (UPI) — Officers of the former South Vietnamese regime sent to reeducation camps have begun returning to their families in the Saigon area.

The first group of 875 men and women returned Friday to a family welcome and a ceremony sponsored by Saigon authorities.

The officers were taken to indoctrination camps in the countryside June 15 for political training and farm labor.

Officials said about 300,000 ex-officers and senior civil servants have been sent to the camps since the new government took over South Vietnam April 30.

Former woman police officer Pham Thi Nhan said life at the camps was not difficult.

She described a normal day as beginning with physical training. Political classes and some farm-type labor were followed by evening discussion groups and entertainment.

Tran Thiet, a former infantry major, said there were good relations in the camp between teachers and students "and we were all very happy to join in the work."

Thiet said he was allowed to return home after getting three "excellent" marks in daily tests and one in a weekly test.

All those interviewed said they had been well fed.

International Red Cross workers Friday told former U.S. Embassy guards they would get in touch with Washington to get back pay still owed the men by the Americans.

About 1,400 guards contend they are owed $600 each in back pay and termination pay.

They identified Steven B. Bray, chief of the U.S. Mission Warden Office, as the official who allegedly left without paying his employees.

The city has entered into a contract with a New York architect for a fee of $850,000 to draw up plans for a new art museum on Broadway in the Long Beach Civic Center complex. Will the people of Long Beach have a chance to vote on this project? M.H., Long Beach.

No. Funding for the new art museum will come from the sale of bonds and from oil revenues, not from tax money, and this type of financing does not require the consent of the electorate, according to John H. Williams, administrative assistant to the city manager. It's a common misconception that the electorate must approve such a project. Several years ago, Long Beach citizens defeated a plan for financing the new city hall and library buildings with general obligation bonds, but residents were not voting on whether or not the complex should be built as some people erroneously believed. Work on the new art museum should begin next spring, and the job is expected to be completed by mid-1978, Williams said. The anticipated cost of the museum is $7.4 million, plus $500,000 for furnishings and equipment. The architect's fee is $852,104.

Bake-off

Where can I get information on how to enter the next Pillsbury Bake-off contest? E.O., Long Beach.

You can write to the Pillsbury Co., 840 Pillsbury Building, Minneapolis, Minn. 55402, attention: Kathleen Olson, to be placed on the mailing list. The next bake-off will not be held until the fall of 1976 and the entry blanks have not yet been printed, a company spokesman said, but you will be sent all the information as soon as it is available. She said the company receives tens of thousands of recipes for the contest. All are read and some eliminated immediately because the contest rules have not been followed. A group of economists is hired to read the others and throw out those that already have been used. They then pick out about 300 recipes that look good and these are tested and retested until the list of finalists is whittled down to the 100 finalists. Many of the recipes are prepared and taken by a professional research team to supermarkets and shopping centers for consumer reaction to them. The eight judges are food editors and nutritionists with no connection to the Pillsbury Co. Four of them judge recipes made with Pillsbury grocery products and the other four judge those made with refrigerated products. The women whose recipes were selected for the finals are flown to the bake-off site and each is provided with a small kitchen in which she prepares her recipe on the day of the bake-off. The judges then test each one and make their final decision on the winners. Last year's two first prizes were $25,000.

Property values

How can we find out if the assessed valuation of our property has gone up? We never receive any statements. D.R., Long Beach.

When there is a change in the assessed valuation of your house you will get a notice in the mail from the county assessor's office, according to Greg Ross, field deputy for Philip Watson, the Los Angeles County assessor. However, to clear up any doubts, you can phone the assessor's regional office in Long Beach at 599-9051 and ask the value of your property in 1974 and the value this year. In addition to the notice of any change in the valuation, all homeowners will be receiving copies of their tax bills during the first week in November. Before this year, homeowners who paid their property taxes through impound accounts with a mortgage company did not automatically receive copies of the bills. Their bills were sent to the mortgage companies and copies were furnished to the homeowners only on request.

SOUND OFF!

I have just finished a month of jury duty and during that time, I served on one jury where the trial lasted three days and I was called to two other panels, which took a day each. The rest of the time I sat in the jury assembly room with 100 plus others. My experience was not unique — some people did not get on even one jury. Only on seven of the days I was there, were panels called. One third of the people could easily handle the load. The waste of time and money is unbelievable. With our modern technology, there is no excuse for not updating the present system of calling people to jury duty. B.T., La Habra.

progress" from those talks, but he declined to characterize the progress as a breakthrough, saying only: "I am hopeful. But we haven't really settled it finally."

As he and Ford began their Saturday meeting, the President was asked if he would have some Middle East announcement over the weekend.

"When we do, we'll let you know," the President told reporters.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen said no announcement on the Middle East was expected over the weekend.

Kissinger and Ford scheduled three meetings over the weekend, as well as a Saturday night private dinner with their wives at Ford's home here. The Kissingers are staying at a nearby chalet.

The President was ending the first week of a two-week stay at this Rocky Mountain resort.

Besides meeting with Kissinger, er, Ford conferred with three speechwriters to get ready for a two-day trip Monday and Tuesday that will take him to an oil shale mining operation at Rifle, Colo., to the Iowa State Fair and public appearances in Des Moines, Minneapolis, and Peoria and Pekin, Ill.

Every day of his first week here, the President spent almost five hours on Vail's two mountain-side golf courses.

The only major announcement of the week came Friday when he told a Vail energy symposium that he would veto a six-month extension of oil price controls and lift the $2-a-barrel oil import tariff if Congress sustains the veto.

Chrysler said that only a relatively small number of engines failed to meet the tests. He said that of 45 cars with the 440 CID engines tested during April and May only 14 were below specifications.

"CALIFORNIA'S air quality remains virtually unaffected by the number of engines involved," the spokesman said.

Quinn said the ARB took the action because of Chrysler's "completely inadequate response" to two recall and repair campaigns ordered earlier this year by the state agency.

Beginning Monday, Quinn said, the Department of Motor Vehicles will review all automobile registration slips sent in by Chrysler, Dodge and Plymouth dealers to determine if any of the cars with the 440 CID engine are being sold.

If sales have taken place, the DMV will begin disciplinary action against the dealer which could include a suspension or revocation of the license to sell new cars, Quinn said.

Quinn said Chrysler had distributed 6,565 cars with the "high pollution" engines to California dealers this year. It was not known how many had already been sold and how many remained in dealers' inventories.

TOM QUINN
"Completely Inadequate Response"

THE $328,000 fine was based on a section of the state antismog code which permits the agency to levy a $50 fine for each car which violates standards, he said. Quinn said another section of the law permits the ARB to assess a $5,000 fine per car but that such a penalty would have been "extremely excessive and could have jeopardized the economic health" of Chrysler Corp.

General Motors, Ford, American Motors and foreign manufacturers are producing cars which meet the California requirements, he said.

More than 25 per cent of the cars equipped with the 440 engine failed assembly line emission tests conducted under state supervision, he said.

from France and Scandinavia also attended.

When the troops arrived, they moved up a barren hill to the stadium and, firing into the air, they tried to clear the road with the aid of Communists who tossed gasoline bombs.

A witness said the mobs set up three defense lines — those in the first line wore crash helmets.

The Communist party in the town of Faro issued a communique demanding the immediate intervention of the military authorities and severe and exemplary punishment of those responsible for the siege.

"We hold the armed forces responsible for the security of our comrades," the communique said. "We are worried since the lives of these Communist Party militants, and especially General Secretary Alvaro Cunhal, are in danger."

Reporter Helen Gibson said "we saw three Communists wounded by shotgun fire lying bleeding inside the stadium."

It was not immediately clear who provoked the latest incident in an escalation of anti-Communist violence that has swept the country in the past five weeks, killing six persons wounding more than 125.

The car of Communist Party Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal was stoned as he arrived at the rally.

UPI photographer Hugh Peralta was hit by a rock outside the stadium after talking with some members of the anti-Communist crowd that numbered in the hundreds.

"There were about 20 of them who surrounded me," he said. "They said most of these Communists came in from Lisbon and from out of town."

The size of the Communist crowd was estimated at about 1,000 and included women and children, some of whom began to cry. The Communists sang their international hymn, the Internationale.

Jim Younger of the Chicago Tribune said, "I saw three Communists take guns and start firing," but it was not immediately clear who provoked whom.

The wave of anti-Communist violence began five weeks ago in Rio Maior as a protest against the Communist-backed Prime Minister Vasco Goncalves and the leftward turn of Portugal's military regime.

The last time shots were fired was Aug. 10, when Communists fired on an attacking mob in the northern town of Braga.

The latest clash started about 11 p.m., and three hours later the Communist crowd of about 1,000 was still trapped inside the stadium.

Accounts of which side started the violence differed.

Those inside the stadium — among them European and American newsmen covering the Portuguese political crisis — said they first heard the thuds and bangs of rocks hitting the outside of the arena. Other witnesses said the Communists first began firing.

Once the gunfire and stone throwing began, Communists ripped up wooden benches and seats to make clubs and staves.

"Any comrade with weapons be prepared to defend us," a man said over the loudspeaker.

Witnesses said five cars outside the stadium were wrecked by the crowd. The wave of anti-Communist violence has forced the Communist Party underground in much of the conservative and religious north.

Cunhal announced Thursday the party was going to launch a campaign to restore its influence.

Kidnaped heir freed

tion upon learning of Samuel's release, he said, "Hell of a lot of smiling."

Rinehart declined comment on aspects of the 8-day kidnaping episode, saying, "I don't think anyone wants to put out a definitive statement of what happened at this time."

He continued, "We don't want to do anything that will jeopardize the investigation. We hope to have something later today more definitive."

Rinehart said the younger Bronfman would undergo medical tests and would then be questioned by the FBI on the specifics of his abduction.

When asked to describe Samuel's appearance after the ordeal, Rinehart, whose face was whiskered, "he hasn't even shaved as much as I have."

Rinehart had kind words for the FBI's handling of the case, which he described as "tactful and extraordinarily competent."

Edgar Bronfman, who is chairman of the billion-dollar Seagram Co. Ltd., arrived at 3:40 a.m. at his Fifth Ave. apartment in a taxi with another man.

Patrick Harnett, doorman, took the two men up in an elevator with three FBI agents. Later he told newsmen that Bronfman had informed the agents, "Sam was all right."

There was little other word until at 8:55 a.m., two other agents arrived, one with a large black satchel and the other with a slim brown briefcase. One was asked whether Samuel Bronfman had been released.

"No," was all he would say.

Nuclear power 'Cal. future' on '76 ballot

By RON ROACH
Associated Press Writer

SACRAMENTO — California's new Energy Commission won't take sides on the proposed Nuclear Safeguards Initiative, but individual commissioners say they won't duck the issue.

To date, it is 1-0 among commissioners in favor of the initiative.

The four other commissioners haven't taken public stands yet on what may be the most important socio-economic decision facing Californians.

THEY SAY Californians should lay emotions aside and take a cool, hard look at the facts in the initiative proposal on next June's presidential primary ballot.

The initiative would set standards for nuclear power plants which critics say are so tough they would prohibit any new plants and would phase out operation of existing multi-million-dollar plants.

Richard Maullin, chairman of the Energy Resources Conservation and Development Commission, said a commission stand would be powerful fuel for either side's campaign.

And, Maullin said, "Certainly a decision by voters to approve or reject will be taken as a signal for the rest of the nation."

Only commissioner Ronald Doctor takes a stand: "Strictly as an individual, I am in favor of the initiative."

RICHARD MAULLIN
Mum on Initiative

Bob Moretti is the only politician in the group. The former speaker of the state Assembly, a defeated candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in 1974, said:

"It's been virtually impossible for me to stay out of controversial issues. Sometime before the election, I'll make my views known publicly."

Moretti said the implications pro and con must be set before the public who "must try to make a decision based on logic rather than emotions, because there are emotions on both sides of the issue."

Al Pasternak said he was undecided. Richard Tuttle said he wouldn't hesitate to speak out once he has totally analyzed all data.

BUT THEY all have feelings on the impact of passage or failure of the initiative.

Maullin said he hopes all the facts will be brought out by opponents and proponents and by hearings in October conducted by Assemblyman Charles Warren, D-Los Angeles.

If they don't, "I might change my position and say something, which might affect the election," Maullin said.

Which way, Maullin didn't say.

"Being a political scientist by profession," said Maullin, former Rand Corp. researcher, "I know it won't be until next April that the broad public becomes aware of the battle. Right now there are special interest groups."

DOCTOR, a nuclear engineer, explained his position:

"I believe it (the initiative) goes to the heart of some very serious problems that have arisen, problems of such magnitude and overwhelming importance.

"First, it gives people of the state the opportunity to voice their opinions regarding the serious nature of the problem."

Secondly, Doctor said, the initiative makes the Legislature responsible, and that's extremely important.

"I THINK what we're dealing with is of such great importance that it should not be dealt with by appointed representatives, or bureaucrats, but by elected representatives," Doctor said.

"Do we have the right to impose these (nuclear) wastes on future generations, as a burden to be borne without knowing how those generations can handle them?"

Doctor listed two major areas of concern:

SAFETY — "to my way of thinking, at least from the evidence I've seen so far, there has been insufficient experimental work to provide assurances that are necessary. Perhaps there is experimental work that I'm not aware of. If so, it should be brought to the attention of all."

WASTE — "How to dispose of or manage the long-lived radioactive waste? It seems to be a basic philosophical problem. Social and governmental institutions have never lasted as long as those wastes are going to be around."

Doctor stressed conservation as an alternative to nuclear energy.

"We sure as hell don't need all the nuclear energy planned by the utilities in this state," Doctor said. "It's difficult to foresee we will use everything they expect to have in place by the year 2000, and that's without taking into account vigorous conservation programs"

PASTERNAK, a chemical engineer, said the problem with the initiative is a lack of alternatives — "just one point of view."

If successful, he said, the initiative "will create an electric quandary for the state of California. The energy problem really is one of natural gas and oil.

Are we going to burn coal in California?"

The initiative would impose requirements which make it difficult if not impossible to build new nuclear plants. It would require that existing operating plants be phased out. The plants do not meet those complex standards.

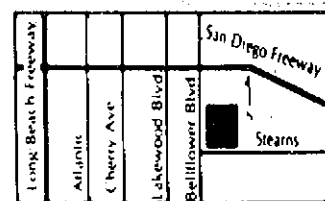

The initiative would require a court to find within one year that a proposed nuclear plant is adequately insured for liability.

"I THINK everyone recognizes it would be very easy to tie up that 'competent court' of jurisdiction for a lot more than one year," Pasternak said.

Pasternak stressed another point: "The initiative provides for a program phase-down of nuclear plants over a five-year period, and my concern is as a licensed nuclear operator sees the phase-down, he'll start looking for a job in another state right away."

Without licensed operators, California couldn't operate the plants, he said.

Taxation with representation (TWR), a group of predominately economics and tax law educators, gave the Senate Finance Committee members an average score of 39 per cent correct votes on measures which would simplify the tax laws and remove special interest tax breaks.

The House Ways and Means Committee received a 43 per cent rating from the group earlier.

Senate panel tax voting scored

By LEE EGERSTROM
Our National Bureau

WASHINGTON—A national taxpayers lobby group, which had rated House members earlier on their voting records for tax reform, has now given low marks for members of the Senate Finance Committee.

Tax measures must start in the House. The finance committee, however, has the first legislative say on tax bills sent the Senate.

Taxation with representation (TWR), a group of predominately economics and tax law educators, gave the Senate Finance Committee members an average score of 39 per cent correct votes on measures which would simplify the tax laws and remove special interest tax breaks.

The House Ways and Means Committee received a 43 per cent rating from the group earlier.

and the House average was slightly higher.

According to Thomas Reese, legislative director of TWR, Sens. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn.; and William Hathaway, D-Maine, led the 18-member finance committee with 86 per cent ratings. Sens. Floyd Haskell, D-Colo., and Walter Mondale, D-Minn., followed with 79 and 71 per cent ratings.

At the bottom of the list were Sens. Bob Dole, R-Kan.; Clifford Hansen, R-Wyo.; and Mike Gravel, D-Alaska, all receiving only 7 per cent ratings.

According to Reese, the study of votes is the first compilation showing the interest of the finance committee in tax reform. It reviews 14 committee votes, six based on the Tax Reduction Act and eight during markup of the energy bill.

Taxation With Representation seeks simplified tax forms understandable for the average citizen, and it opposes efforts by Congress to solve other national problems when writing tax legislation.

As such, the study shows senators from oil states with generally low scores and senators from the non-oil producing northern states with high marks. The exception was Colorado's Haskell, a tax lawyer who is one of the leading tax-reform advocates in Congress.

Other members of the finance committee drawing fairly high scores were Sens. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., with 57 per cent; Vance Hartke, D-Ind., with 50 per cent, and William Roth, the highest rated Republican, from Delaware, with 43 per cent.

Sen. Harry Byrd, Ind.-D-Va., received a 36 per cent rating while four senators, Chairman Russell Long, D-La.; William Brock, R-Tenn.; Robert Packwood, R-Ore.; and Carl Curtis, R-Neb., were all given 29 per cent scores.

Completing the list were Sens. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., with 21 per cent; Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., also 21 per cent, and Paul Fannin, R-Ariz., with 14 per cent.

The taxpayers lobby group conceded nine of the 14 votes were related to oil producers. Sens. Long, Gravel, Bentsen, Curtis, Hansen and Dole from oil states usually voted against raising taxes on oil.

Among its votes, the committee voted against repealing the oil depletion allowance, the TWR rated committee votes for repeal as votes for tax reform.

The group also registered votes against the stripper-well exemption in the oil depletion section as a vote for tax reform.

Exemptions aimed at corporations, principally Lockheed, Pam American and Chrysler, were also considered as antireform. The earlier rating of the House, which also contained a majority of votes on oil-related tax measures, drew a response this past week from Rep. Garner Shriver, R-Kan.

Shriver, again from an oil state, was given a low rating by TWR, as were most of his colleagues. He said in a column sent his constituents that Washington now has seen a rapid increase in "citizens' interest groups, 'that neither Congress, nor our constituents, know who the groups are, whom they represent, or who provides their financial support.'"

Shriver added, "The ultimate congressional rating will be at the polls when voters decide whether their elected officials in Washington actually represent their views."

The taxpayers group, however, explains "their rating system as based on a system of fairness, simplicity, fiscal goals and efficiency."

Mexican drift to socialism charged

By ALFONSO CHARDY
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY — The Mexican government is taking over more and more private enterprises, raising claims among businessmen and opposition politicians that the country is heading full tilt into socialism.

A spokesman for the government denies this, contending that what it is doing is guiding economic development in a nation that still has a large population of poor.

The government says that the state operated 258 enterprises in 1974, but some leading Mexican businessmen say the state already owns or may have some participation in more than 1,000 companies valued at over $5 billion which formerly were in private hands.

The government controls such basic industries as oil, electricity, mining, railroads, agriculture and petrochemicals. It also runs hotels, night clubs, bicycle factories and taco stands.

Because of this, some businessmen and opposition politicians think this country gradually may be joining the Socialist camp through what they called a creeping state takeover of free enterprise.

"I think we are heading to absolute state control of private enterprise," said leading industrialist Alberto Santos de Hoyos, a member of the so-called "Monterrey Group" of conservative businessmen.

Monterrey is Mexico's third largest city and its industrial hub 150 miles south of Laredo, Tex.

Santos de Hoyos was supported in his views by auto executive Armando Fernandez, who also is president of the Mexican Employers Confederation, and Jorge Sanchez Mejorado, an industrialist and president of the National Chambers of Industry Confederation.

"We are seeing a move by the government to control business," he said.

Leaders of the National Action party, the largest Mexican opposition body, also have voiced support for the business attitude.

Labor leaders estimate there are five million unemployed Mexicans, about 25 per cent of the work force compared to a U.S. unemployment rate of 8.4 per cent in July. The country has a population growth of 3.5 per cent annually, one of the largest in the world. Of the 58 million Mexicans, an estimated 80 per cent live at subsistence levels. The per capita income is $600 a year in contrast to about $4,700 in the United States.

The government says it is not against foreign or private investment so long as it contributes to the country's development.

"Mexico is not heading toward socialism," commented Fausto Zapata, press spokesman for President Luis Echeverria and deputy minister of the presidency. "The state ... guides economic development."

Asked if the government planned to abolish private enterprise, Zapata said: "No. To abolish private enterprise would be contrary to the principles sustained in our social pact. Some businessmen suffer from a type of illiteracy in politics ..."

Zapata said the government is trying to "modernize Mexican society" through what he termed new ways of ruling. He added that this has "surprised" private enterprise.

The government-backed Bank of Mexico says a sign of political and economic stability is the fact that U.S. residents have deposited more than $1 billion in Mexican banks in the past two years. The bank said the reason was high deposit interest rates paid by Mexican banks.

A typical case of government takeover was the recent purchase of the Empresas Longoria, a consortium of banks, savings and loan associations, cotton and wheat mills, vegetable oil factories and pasta plants valued by the government at $96 million.

The government said the property came under state control because the owner was deeply in debt and behind in his taxes. The owner, 70-year-old Octaviano Longoria, claimed the government confiscated his property and that he paid his debts. He said the value of the seized enterprises was several times the government's estimate of $96 million.

Some pro-government labor unions have demanded state control of banks.

Decade after riots

Watts still a powderkeg

The goal in this city's black ghetto of Watts 10 years after its week of terror is to survive — to survive unemployment, muggings, killings, robbery and the ignominy of welfare.

For Marquette Frye, whose arrest for drunken driving sparked the 1965 riots there, the world seems to love only junkies and policemen.

In some ways, Frye is a symbol of Watts' despair.

Little has changed since the riots, or "Watts revolt" as some there prefer. Some conditions are worse. Joblessness for inner city blacks stands at about 20 per cent. It is about 9 per cent for the rest of California. In 1965 the rate was about 15 per cent.

Youth gang violence is a daily terror.

RESIDENTS tell police they worry about their children being shot, their purses snatched, their cars stolen, their houses stripped of furniture.

Welfare is still a way of life. In city housing projects in the area more than 90 per cent of the residents are on relief.

There are some changes. "We have arrested the educational trend that was going down, down, down," says a school official. More Watts blacks are going to college. There are blacks in jobs that were not open to them 10, even 5, years ago.

There's the $39 million Martin Luther King Hospital. There are real leaders inside the community who get things done.

Los Angeles has a black mayor. It is unthinkable today that blacks should ride in the back of buses, eat at separate lunch counters, drink at segregated fountains, use separate toilets.

BUT many blacks say they do not glory in having or doing what should have been theirs in the first place as human beings and American citizens.

Another riot? No, say residents who should know. The lesson of 1965 is that you can't win against the police and National Guard. But these same experts add that the Ten years ago the Watts ghetto erupted in riots and its very name became a symbol of urban black frustration. What has happened to Watts in the decade since? An Associated Press study of the area indicates that despite millions of dollars and notable effort, despair is deeper and violence worse.

frustration and sense of helplessness may be reflected in another way. Some point to the youth gang violence — blacks killing and robbing blacks.

Frye lives in a modest frame house not far from the scene of the heaviest rioting.

Through his screen door he sees children on their way home from school who may soon be dropouts like he had been. He sees gang members with their brimmed hats and poorly concealed guns who might soon be dead. Jobless men lounge over parking meters.

HE HAS been arrested 34 times since the riots — robbery, assault, disturbing the peace. Police harassment, he says.

He can't get a job. The white world — and many blacks — fear him as a troublemaker, "the man who started the riot," he says. He does odd jobs now under an alias.

He doesn't feel blame for the riots.

"If it hadn't been me it would have been somebody else," he said in an interview. "And if it had been somebody else that was in my shoes they would be sitting here telling you the same thing."

"I wish it was somebody else. It just happened to me."

He pauses, then says, "Maybe, if it hadn't been me in '65, I might have joined the police department. We need more black officers on the street — people who know black people's needs."

"IF YOU aren't a policeman or a junkie these days, you are dead. So I would be a policeman."

Not surprisingly, Frye says conditions are no better in Watts today than those that spawned the riots. He feels that efforts to improve conditions, the millions of dollars of federal, state and local funds poured into Watts were "pacification programs" and "stalling tactics."

Frye was 21 when he was driving home in a 1955 Buick with his stepbrother, Ronnie, after having a couple of drinks. A highway patrolman stopped the car.

It was about 7 p.m., Aug. 11, 1965. Frye was given a sobriety test and then taken into custody for investigation of drunken driving.

Frye's mother appeared on the scene and got into a scuffle with police. A crowd of 1,000 blacks gathered. Police units arrived.

The crowd grew surly. Bottles and bricks were tossed. The lid blew and six days of rioting, looting and burning began.

In that week 34 persons died and $40 million worth of property was damaged or destroyed. The black area has been free of violent racial confrontation since the riot.

Watts is a five-square-mile community of 150,000 that is the heart of where approximately 750,000 blacks live. When most persons say "Watts," they almost always mean the entire south-central area.

Detroit forced busing vetoed

DETROIT (AP) — A federal judge Saturday rejected the forced busing of Detroit schoolchildren this fall and turned over the job of achieving racial balance in the classrooms to the city board of education.

Just a year after the U.S. Supreme Court overturned a cross-district busing plan for the Detroit area, U.S. District Judge Robert DeMascio rejected two city-only busing proposals. He returned responsibility for desegregation to the school board.

Lawrence Washington of the Detroit branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said: "We're thoroughly disappointed. We're right back to where we started five years ago."

When the Supreme Court rejected cross-district busing last summer, the District Court was ordered to develop a plan to desegregate Detroit schools. DeMascio established a series of guidelines for achieving racial balance Saturday, then returned the proposal to the school board for adoption and implementation of a final plan.

Guidelines outlined by the court included creation of comprehensive programs for in-service training, bilingual-multicultural studies, counseling and career guidance, school community relations and a nondiscriminatory testing program.

DEMASCIO indicated he was more concerned with the quality of education than with any specific busing proposal. He said the desegregation plan must follow the court's guidelines "to eradicate the effects of past segregation."

Coleman Young, Detroit's first black mayor, told reporters he was pleased with the emphasis on quality education. He urged that all Detroit residents examine the court's ruling calmly.

He said he would do everything in his power to see that pupils are protected at the schools, adding that he did not expect any flareups.

For a while after the riots, officialdom poured millions of emergency relief dollars into the black community. But as the Vietnam war gathered steam, money fell off.

Landmarks to the money and effort are sprinkled throughout the area — the hospital, a Bank of America branch, a large welfare building, a small industrial park. But the general feeling today is that few dollars filtered down to the man on the street.

Voices in Watts:

"Some black people have got businesses: some professionals have gotten into significant jobs," says Bishop H.H. Brookins of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. "But the majority of people are worse off today than they were in '65. In south-central Los Angeles deterioration is at every corner. Education has become a nightmare. People are afraid for their very lives."

A black teacher in Watts: "Half of Watts is not there anymore, but the conditions still exist: unemployment, welfare lines, food-stamp lines, muggings, robberies. Nothing has changed."

"The majority of black people in this community are more concerned about day-to-day survival — protect your home from the Crips, from the Brims (youth gangs), from the drug pushers."

"The community is apathetic," says Grace Payne, director of the Westminster Neighborhood Association. "They have lost their pride, their desire."

There are many theories why the gangs multiplied. Police Sgt. Ronald Banks, president of the Oscar Joel Bryant Association of black police officers, said that 10 years after the riot parents and teachers can offer no further explanations or remedies about the plight of blacks.

WATTS IN 1965: AS THOUGH A BOMB HAD STRUCK IN STREET

Lt. Ted Cooke, investigative support division, gang activities section, LAPD:

"The community is behind bars. People can't have their kids in the street because someone will steal their coat or shoot them."

"If they go to the store they're afraid of being robbed on the way. When they go into the store they're afraid of getting their purse snatched. When they come out they're afraid of getting robbed of their groceries, and they hope their car's there and when they come home they hope their furniture's in the house."

There are 180 gangs in the Los Angeles area with 12,000 members, police say. That is 50 times the number of gangs in 1965 and, said one officer, "They are 100 times as violent."

About three-quarters are black gangs. Gangs last year were involved in 55 deaths, 943 assaults with a deadly weapon, 346 assaults with intent to commit murder, 279 kidnappings, 22 rapes, 11 fire bombings and 105 cases of shooting at an inhabited dwelling, police say.

"So the kids say, 'Well, your riot didn't work and your explanation and all the good things they were going to do for us didn't work, so we're going to live for today,'" said Bryant.

"They can't see any further than next week because there seems to be no point in it. So it is kind of self-destructive."

Joblessness also has contributed to the gangs' growth, some believe. "Now with college graduates out of work, what good is it to get through high school?" says Olin Newsome of Teen Post Inc. "There is an atmosphere of drift and no consensus of where to go or what to do."

There are a few new businesses and a few new jobs in the south-central areas. But hundreds of others never returned after being burned out in the August fires a decade ago.

"Most of our clients looking for jobs have to travel at least 7 or 10 miles just for a job referral," said Richard Procello, manager of the South-Central State Service Center. "This community has little or no industrial base."

Gang violence has improved police-community relations, singled out as a major cause of the riots. "People cooperate now because they're scared," said one officer.

Over the last five years police officials have also introduced programs designed to get policemen out of their cars and mixing in the community: the Basic Car Plan, Neighborhood Watch and Team Policing.

As for education, "My overriding impression is that we have arrested the trend that was going down, down, down," said Deputy Schools Supt. James B. Taylor. "I wish I could say it was going up. I can't really say that."

Watts schools, among the oldest in the city, are rundown. They lack money for programs to improve reading and math skills, which are about 20 points off the national norm — though slightly improved since 1965.

There are assaults on teachers and gang fights on playgrounds.

Still, says Taylor, the school dropout rate has dipped from 40 per cent in 1964 to 36 per cent today.

Opportunities slightly better in Watts

By MIKE GOODKIND
Associated Press Writer

"I saw everything happen; I saw a person get killed, and I saw a man carry off half a cow he had taken from a market."

Tony Pompey was 7 when the Watts riots occurred in August 1965.

He fearfully watched the looting and burning from the windows of a small frame house with his seven brothers and sisters and their mother.

If there are changes from the riot-torn days, they are as subtle as observed or simply reflected by the residents of Watts.

Pompey, now 17, leaned his 6-foot-3 frame against a railing in Jordan High School's cafeteria. His letter sweater proclaims the young black man to be "Sir Pompey," and a majority of the 1,800 students at the stark, gray ghetto high school voted to proclaim him next year's student body president.

Between sips of juice he talked about his hopes of attending Amherst after graduating next year.

Several of his Jordan classmates have preceded him there.

"I don't think I'll be playing football. I'll be working too hard to stay up," he says about the impending academic challenge, so different from the high school where principal Leon Jordan says the average student reads at the eighth or ninth grade level.

As in 1965, Pompey's mother is on welfare and funds are tight at home. Tony helps himself and his family with an afterschool job at a service station.

But his aspirations are backed by about $500,000 in scholarship funds now available yearly to Jordan students.

The money, says the principal, was largely unavailable before the riots. It has come via a kaleidoscope of federal, state, local and private programs prompted, said the principal, by an establishment consciousness raised by a mixture of guilt and fear.

At the 77th Street Police Station, Officer Donald Brown, a white, talks about allegations that police treat blacks rougher than whites when stopped for routine violations.

"I know a lot of times I personally don't know what a bad or good guy looks like, especially at 3 or 4 in the morning, especially when they make their funny little moves," says the ex-Marine and seven-year police veteran.

"I aim to go home every day... We've had too many policemen shot by walking up to cars."

"Gang members don't have enough money to get to your house out in the suburbs to steal," says E. Grace Payne, a 33-year resident of Watts. "They've got to do their thing right here at my house."

Mrs. Payne, a former marketing executive who now heads the Westminster Neighborhood Association, is not alone among community leaders when she asks, "Why do reporters always stress the negative?"

"Look at these plans," she says pointing to an architect's rendering of the $634,000 multipurpose center her Presbyterian church-affiliated center hopes to start building in October.

"Isn't that progress?"

But a slightly different Grace Payne emerges as she sits quietly and comments about the community as a whole.

"There has been some progress in Watts in the last 10 years but it has been very slow," she says.

Why New Yorkers still love their city

By MALCOLM N. CARTER
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Seagulls dip and swoop and swirl over the water. On the leaves, there glimmers a summer dawn's dew. Joggers thump, thump, thump around the reservoir.

Above and beyond the trees of Central Park, the tensions of the coming day seem to loom in the skyscrapers — dense, towering masses with empty corridors and offices that will soon be charged with new ideas, hard decisions, opportunities won and lost.

It's the beginning of another day of crisis in Gotham.

Today it's a strike by sanitationmen. Great mounds of garbage lie stinking on the sidewalks and the streets. Another hardship to be endured. And, some might say, another reason to leave New York.

YET those joggers keep on thinking as though the garbage were a million miles away.

On television that night, Mayor Abraham D. Beame looks grim. Again. Speaking hopefully of the three-day strike's imminent end, he says New Yorkers are tough; they can take it.

They always do in a city where crisis follows crisis: a single fire knocks out telephones in a 300-square-block area, enough phones for all of Vermont; policemen mount a "fear city" campaign; the city runs out of cash.

The $12.3 billion budget is already the biggest in the nation, save the nation's itself. To balance the behemoth, the mayor levies additional taxes on the most highly taxed populace in the country.

Another crisis, and the people who live here stay on, mindful of their durability. Sometimes even proud of it.

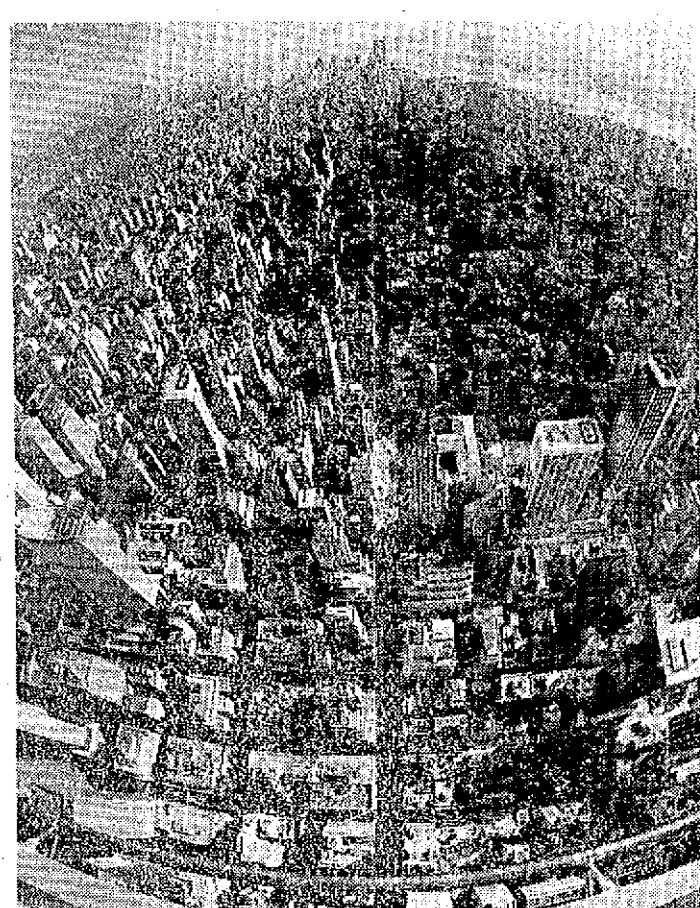

THIS is a city seemingly filled with adversities — the fear of being threatened with a knife and robbed, although the likelihood of that is higher in 18 other major U.S. cities; the spectacle of crowded, graffiti-smudged subway trains screeching through dark tunnels; the horror of fat, loathsome rats scuttling between cracked and peeling tenement walls; the terror of rape; the roaches.

But still they remain: eight million New Yorkers who love and sometimes hate and need the city despite its crises. Maybe even because of them.

Roughly half the New Yorkers surveyed by The New York Times recently said they lived here, not because they had to, but because they wanted to. Two-thirds of the 419 respondents said they thought job and career opportunities were better here than elsewhere, and three-quarters of them said it was a good place to visit.

How come?

ASK a native Egyptian who tends bar in Manhattan: "The quantity of

MOST NEW YORKERS WOULD ENJOY THE VIEW

possibilities in the city are much higher than any place else."

Or ask a Brooklynite who writes children's books: "Anybody who wants to do anything can find it here in the city."

Since the Dutch first settled at the mouth of the Hudson River, the flow of immigrants to New York has never stopped.

The Irish came here. So did the Italians, Greeks, Ukrainians, Chinese, Hungarians, Lebanese, German Jews, Puerto Ricans and Jamaicans. And many of them stayed, stamping the city with their distinctive ethnic flavor and making it possible to purchase pizza pie or spinach with equal ease.

Nowhere are the ethnic treasures more apparent than in Manhattan, the very essence of New York, where opposite sides of the same street can evoke two different countries.

AND as reputed, Manhattanites are always in a hurry. With good reason. There is so much to see, taste, feel and so little time in which to do it all.

The play, the movie, the performer might be gone tomorrow. The missed bus, taxi or subway train might also be a missed opportunity. Beat the traffic light, dodge the dog droppings without breaking stride, catch the waiter, fight for a subway seat, rush past the pander without a glance and never, never, never waste a minute.

But this extreme of haste makes all the more appealing such an enclave of peace as the vest-pocket park with its rippling fountain half a block from the frenzy of Fifth Avenue.

And the extreme of quietude makes choice that much more possible. It is not a question of whether to hear jazz or rock, but whether to hear progressive jazz among a dozen other varieties or acid rock or, say, folk rock. All of it live.

NOR IS it a question of which is the best restaurant in town. But which is the best French or Indian or Czechoslovakian or Thai or Japanese restaurant.

In the number of extremes lies their acceptability. New Yorkers can dare to be different without fear of reproach; and, in being different, they enrich the city.

A man wearing sandwich boards rails in favor of "husband liberation" day after day in Rockefeller Center, attracting nary a native's glance.

Members of the world's biggest, avowedly homosexual community parade a quarter the length of Manhattan. In skin-bugging satins or studded leather bikinis, they rally in Central Park for gay pride without causing even a smattering of sensation.

New Yorkers, after all, have come to expect the unexpected.

IN SOHO — the cast-iron architectural district which takes its name from being south of Houston Street (pronounced "House-ton," without apologies to Sam Houston) — a natural foods restaurant fills bowls with toasted soybeans. Surprisingly enough for such a place, the bowls rest on a cozy liquor bar.

A lunch wagon at a nearby corner serves, not the familiar hot dog with sauerkraut or onions, but falafel, a Middle Eastern snack of fried chick peas.

Across West Broadway, two street clowns appear, begin their juggling routine and in no time have a crowd of 50 giggling and chuckling at their antics.

Once a bleak section of strictly industrial buildings, Soho is now the Off-Broadway of the art world. Behind the grim gray and red brick exteriors, there exist vast studios and living lofts filled with experiments at the leading edge of artistic creativity and with lush greenery of every description in protest against the blankness of the neighborhood's many walls.

SOHO is part of historic lower Manhattan, where New York began. Within walking distance are a half-dozen neighborhoods of distinctly different colorations, each evoking the city's heritage.

To the north is Greenwich Village. To the east is Little Italy and the Lower East Side, where such notables as Irving Berlin, Paul Muni, Eddie Cantor and Sen. Jacob Javits were reared. To the south are Chinatown, City Hall and the winding streets of Old New York, once the nation's capital.

The Village, as New Yorkers call the bohemian bastion of the past, is still a lively area, full of ferment, good music and casual styles of living.

It was here that "The Fantasticks" opened, and it is still playing 16 years later, two doors from a funeral home.

IN Washington Square Park, where muggers prey at night, a throng is lured by the rhythmic chant of a fresco gambler: "Chuck-a-luck, chuck-a-luck, the more you put down, the more you pick up."

Not far away, they're playing something quite different, a mournful blues from a battered old trumpet and a guitar.

Although the seats around the park's inlaid stone tables are wet with rain, a weathered and wrinkled man wearing a sun-bleached, stained straw hat is losing at checkers.

"Who says I know how to play?" he asks the winner winningly.

On a Sunday, the Lower East Side is as jammed as pickles in a jar. Orchard Street is closed to cars but curb to curb with people.

It was here that the Irish first settled at the end of the last century. They were followed by Eastern European Jews; some of whose families still live there. And they were followed by Puerto Ricans, more than a million of whom now live all over New York.

ALL came here in search of a better life, and many have found it.

The result of the flux has left the Lower East Side a study in contrasts, of bodegas and barrels of pickled herring.

Knowledgeable New Yorkers make their way here to buy pocketbooks or caviar at bargain prices, to munch kasha knishes and to haggle with the shopkeepers.

Almost imperceptibly, the Lower East Side melts into Little Italy and Chinatown.

In Little Italy, an insistent tarantella blares from a speaker, garlic scents the air and cafe tables shaded by gaily colored umbrellas spill into Mulberry Street.

Charcoal-broiled sweetbreads; red, white and green pennants; cheese cake fresh from the oven; espresso — all in the mean streets that are said to be the safest and the friendliest in town.

A BLOCK from Umberto's, where Joey Gallo ate his last meal, Canal Street slices across Manhattan. Here begins Chinatown, bright with neon lights.

Roasted ducks long dead hang by their necks in storefront windows, through which are visible the jars of twisted dried brown roots and stalks of unfamiliar seasonings.

Past what restaurant, behind what closed doors, down what flights of stairs are the infamous gambling dens? The outsider can only guess, for this is the Orient: clamorous, mysterious and exotic.

The British occupied this area nearly two centuries ago and imprisoned the American revolutionary soldiers memorialized now in the oasis that is the graveyard of Trinity Church.

CATCHING the sun's noontime rays there, a number of young persons, many of them shirtless, perch on the soldiers' monument. Although a mere block from the tumult of the New York Stock Exchange, they are as distant and as wistful as a cloud.

Leigh Dean pauses while making a gravestone rubbing to say she comes here often. "It's a place to retreat from all the chaos and the noise and the jungle that's around us," she says.

"The thing is that there are so many things in this city that are free," she says. "Perhaps it takes an imagination."

In the summer, New York is "free city" — free outdoor performances of the Metropolitan Opera, free films in the parks, free music on the streets.

OF course, some entertainment costs money — the much-vaunted cultural wealth of the city. The museums. The theater. The movies as new as a world premiere, as old as a silent classic.

At certain times, Broadway pulses. Footsteps quicken. Necks crane toward celebrities. Peacock clothes appear.

Some parts of the Great White Way are so clogged with limousines and lesser cars that a fire engine with siren screaming moves only one block in 10 minutes.

Surrounded like islands in a sea of sleaze, the theaters empty out to leave Times Square to the prostitutes, the pimps, the midnight cowboys, the topless bars, the massage parlors and the pornographic book stores. And not a few unwitting tourists.

ACROSS town, on the elegant East Side, the singles life swings in bars with names like Friday's, Maxwell's Plum and Adam's Apple. Making friends is the ostensible object. Easy sex is the frequent result there and in bars meant just for homosexual encounters.

In these self-consciously casual and resolutely joyous nightspots, loneliness is the motor and money, the key. But no one seems to mind meeting where drinks are dear, where dress is flawlessly chic, where everyone's hunting and many are hurting, where friendship rests on a mortar of words tossed over the din.

Failure — going home alone. Maybe tomorrow, for there is no last chance in a city of hope.

The joggers will be out in the park early.

Niihau—-island of serenity

By RON TATON
Associated Press Writer

HONOLULU — At the northwest end of Hawaii lie 70 square miles of mystery, a privately owned island deliberately cut off from the modern world.

Bought from a Hawaiian king for $10,000 more than a century ago, Niihau Island is still run with a firm, paternalistic hand.

Nobody is allowed there without the owner's permission, and permission is given only to state health and education inspectors, former residents and sometimes former residents' friends.

The only inhabitants are about 235 employees of the owners, most of them pure-blooded Hawaiians whose families have lived there for generations. Niihau ("Nee-ce-how") is the last island where Hawaiian is the standard spoken and written language.

There are no doctors. No telephones. No television. No jails. There is almost no contact with the outside world. Residents who move away are not allowed to live there again.

Niihau is owned by Helen Robinson and her two sons, descendants of the original owners. They don't discuss why they carry on the family tradition of separation from a changing world. But the Robinsons are known to be authorities on Hawaiian culture, and people who know them say the family wants to perpetuate a way-of-life that is rapidly disappearing on other islands.

THE ROBINSONS never speak with newsmen, and few former residents will discuss the Niihau way of life because they are afraid they won't be allowed back to visit friends and relatives. The only recent photographs of the island were taken from a plane.

"The Robinsons don't want us to bring Western ideas back to the island," says one former resident. "We may go back to visit, but we must have permission from the Robinsons and cannot stay longer than one month."

This and other former residents agreed to talk about Niihau only on condition that they not be identified. From these accounts a picture emerges of an isolated, spartan, almost feudal culture clinging to vanishing rural ways.

The only way to get to Niihau—with the Robinsons' permission—is on an 11-passenger World War II landing craft that makes a weekly trip from Kauai Island, 17 miles away.

The residents live in old wood frame houses provided by the owners and draw a small salary.

THERE IS LITTLE plumbing and no electricity in the houses. Those who want regular contact with the outside world listen to battery-powered radios.

For emergencies, there is a radio transmitter to call Kauai, where the Robinsons live and manage other extensive agricultural holdings. For first aid and minor illnesses, there is a makeshift infirmary housing the island's only electric generator.

The quiet life on Niihau suggests an isolated ranch in the American Southwest more than a tropical island. The islanders tend the Robinsons' cattle and sheep herds on the dry, windswept land, make commercial charcoal and collect wild honey. There is just enough water for the people to grow their own vegetables.

There are no artesian wells and very little rainfall, so even drinking water is scarce, a former resident says. "Rainwater is caught in tanks and rationed."

Some of the islanders collect tiny seashells and string them into leis that sell for as much as $2,000 on other islands. But output is low. Islanders who have visited other islands to display or sell the leis have refused to talk about anything else with strangers.

GUNS ARE FORBIDDEN. Like their ancestors, islanders hunt wild pigs with ropes and traps, and fish with nets and spears.

Liquor also is forbidden, and religion encouraged. Islanders are expected to attend services at the only church, which is Congregational — the denomination that early missionaries brought to Hawaii.

The Robinsons are descendants of New Zealand immigrants and have been steeped in Hawaiian life for generations. Many family members have spoken Hawaiian fluently.

Mrs. Eliza Sinclair, a widow who came to Hawaii from New Zealand after her husband's death, bought Niihau from King Kamehameha IV for $10,000 in 1864. Ownership eventually passed to her grandsons, Ayimer and Lester Robinson.

Ayimer was manager of Niihau Ranch for more than 50 years before his death in 1967 and was the patriarch who established the isolation of the island. He spoke fluent Hawaiian and worked alongside his employees on Niihau. The Hawaiians looked to him with respect and love.

Ayimer, a bachelor, left his 74 per cent interest in the island to Lester and his wife, Helen. Lester died two years later, leaving his one-quarter interest to his widow and sons, Bruce and Keith. Under terms of Ayimer's will, the nephews will inherit their uncle's majority share upon the death of their mother.

HELEN ROBINSON, who is now 65, and her sons live quietly and unpretentiously on Kauai, tending to the operation of Niihau and other family land holdings.

"The people of Niihau, particularly the elders, have great respect for the Robinsons in every way," says a former resident. "Some of the younger ones who have gone to school on Kauai may be discontent because they have been exposed to another way of life."

Hawaii's Department of Education supervises a school on Niihau for about 60 children in grades one through eight. Children can go to Kauai for further education if they wish, but many meet state requirements by taking vocational courses such as carpentry on Niihau.

"We emphasize basic skills and encourage natural talents such as music," says a department official. "Goals of the Niihau school are different, so you cannot really compare the school with others. But we feel that for them it is the proper education."

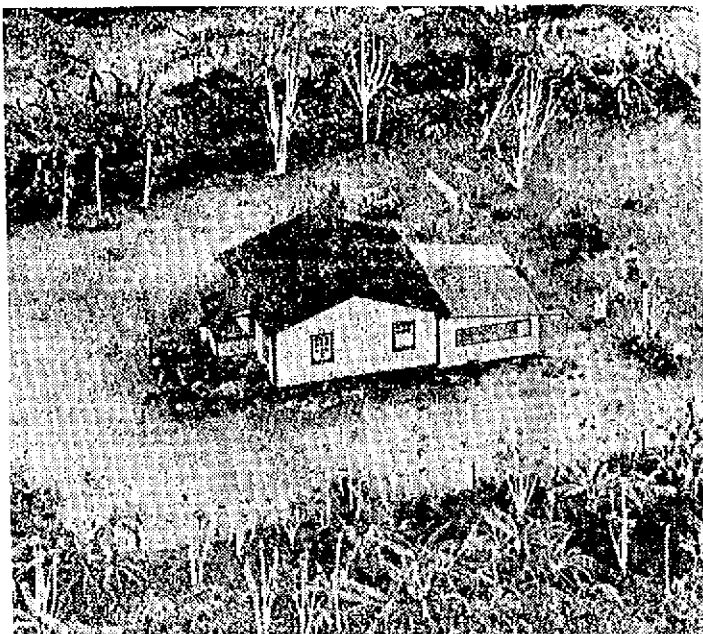

The state accommodates the Robinson wishes. Hawaii Gov. George Ariyoshi says the state is ready to lend assistance if asked.

"BUT THE GOVERNMENT should not get involved in their life style as long as the people are not exploited," he adds. There are no complaints of exploitation.

Five years ago Ayiyoshi's predecessor, John A. Burns, asked the state legislature to acquire Niihau through condemnation. Burns said he wanted to give the residents a real choice about their future. The measure died after the Robinsons sent assurances that, should they ever decide to sell, the state would get the first chance to buy Niihau.

Burns estimated the purchase price at less than $2 million. Higher private offers have been rumored.

Though legislative proposals to acquire the island still arise, no change appears imminent for those who continue to live on Niihau in isolation, quiet and peace. A former resident says: "They are happy people."

LBCC shouldn't close it 'Crucible' well done

By MARK CLUTTER
Staff Writer

"The Crucible," by Arthur Miller, is scheduled to close tonight at Long Beach City College, Clark Avenue and Harvey Way. This is too bad. The seats of the little theater are sold out, so don't bother to go.

SURELY some repetitions should be scheduled. Many more theater lovers would like to see this play. Arthur Miller is one of America's great contemporary playwrights. "The Crucible" is a fine play, admirably directed by Shashin Desai at LBCC.

It concerns the famous witch trials in Salem, Mass., early in our colonial history. But the trials, as presented by Miller, are not period pieces. The play says much about America and the human race today, tomorrow and forever.

The trials involved the reaction of the Puritans to the strange fantasies of teen-agers and other neurotics. The star is Abigail, played by Karen Miller. This vibrant actress should have a future.

The stage, made of timbers, seemed quite correct for this play. Of course, other shows have used the interesting stage.

One wishes the City College players had a little more adequate theater. It's rather crowded.

THE cast was a solid team, each person an individual but working well together. They are Karen Miller, Chuck Wise, Monica Lewis, Pattie Dole, Kenneth Freedman, David Fruechting, Jeff Paul, Jeff Rittman, Mike Dyer, Joyce Hackett, Joanne Juleff, Paul Bethel, Larry Daggett, Louis Schilling, Dee Dee Gibbons, Loretta Lowe, Janine Swenson, Lynne Brooks, Patty Deroun, Amy Theberge, Roger Dunn, Romeo Ramos, Tobie Gerber.

Ask any old-timer. Does he remember Fay Wray? Sure. What does he associate her with? That's easy — a whale-size ape. And what else? The Empire State building.

But what about her big pictures, with top male stars like Ronald Coleman, Spencer Tracy, Cary Grant, and Gary Cooper? Well, yes, but, you know, there was that big one. Fay Wray is mostly remembered as the girl in the clutches of a giant gorilla in the movie "King Kong." Miss Wray appeared in more than 75 other films. But the 1933 monster classic became her stereotype.

She took it all with good grace. She was one of the top leading ladies of cinema in the 1920s and also appeared on Broadway.

One day, producer Merian Cooper told her he wanted her for a picture in which her leading man would be tall and dark. He did not add "handsome." It turned out to be the 50-foot ape.

Despite her other movies, the tremendous success of "King Kong" moved her into a series of monster films. She was pursued by a vampire. She was held prisoner in a diving bell in "Below the Sea."

Miss Wray retired from motion pictures in 1943. But she made a brief comeback in 1955 after the death of her husband, writer Robert Riskin.

Now retired at 67, Fay Wray lives in the fashionable Brentwood district in Los Angeles. She appeared in some television programs, including a series, in the 1950s, and her last movie was "Hell on Frisco Bay" in 1955.

Audience delighted despite the no-nos

By DENISE KUSEL
Staff Writer

David Crosby and Graham Nash offered up a plate of tidbits from a new album (their first as a duo) and a mixed good old days salad at their opening concert at the Amphitheater.

The audience didn't seem to mind that most of the harmonies — something very important to the success of the tandem — were flat.

The sell-out crowd didn't mind when David Crosby forgot what he was doing in the middle of a song and stopped playing.

the opportunity to show off subtle gentleness and artistic visions in their musical compositions.

Crosby and Nash have carried with them the burden of being the lesser of the four talents that comprised the Crosby-Stills-Nash and Young supergroup.

I DON'T think that their current stand at the Amphitheater will do much to dispute the claim. One fan put it all into perspective when he said, "they're like something out of a different era"... try the 1960s.

Nash emerged as the hero of the night. He was the solid talent. Crosby, who has certainly been around long enough to get his act together (he was an original member of the Byrds), should have put a little more time and effort into his singing.

The audience clapped for any amount of musical trash that Nash and Crosby gave them. There were no demands for excellence.

"Lady of the Island" and "My House" and "Southbound Train," all old CSNY standbys were the best of the first half of the set.

While their new compositions are vivid and appealing, their ability to carry a concert was sorely lacking.

Badges also break out

CHICAGO (AP) — There have been 32 escapes from Cook County Jail this year, but more than 100 inmates are missing. Authorities said Saturday 48 identification stars have disappeared.

The badges worn by county Department of Corrections officers were stored in the jail.

DeJesus score
HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Luchi DeJesus will write the score for "Welcome to Xanadu," starring Linda Blair and Martin Sheen.

Earl Wilson

His 'missus' Britt is on his mind

NEW YORK — British rock star Rod Stewart kept talking about "the missus." He was sitting in the presidential suite at the St. Regis asking, "Where's the missus? Out spending me money, probably," he said with a shrug.

He is not married to his "missus," Britt Ekland. "I don't think I want to put me coat up behind the door just yet," he said. He and his missus will desert England and probably settle down in Hollywood, although he thought New Orleans would be nice, too.

glorious months," he answered. "She has a great insight, she is a great inspiration." Suddenly he added, "There she is now! Darling, you got me into trouble, being late."

Britt threw herself into his arms and they claved at each other for a couple of minutes, kissing and sighing. Yes, she'd been shopping. A photographer wished to take pictures of them.

"You must make him beautiful — he's extremely beautiful," she said, running her hand over his hair.

"His hair's as long as yours," I said.

"He just got a haircut — can't you tell?" she said.

And then she began talking of the body of her mister, as men discuss the bodies of girls. "Notice his very nice-fitting pants," she said. "His bum is his best feature. He uses it on the stage. He wiggles it."

"TOM JONES and Engelbert Humperdinck wiggle theirs," I mentioned.

"But their bottoms are sagging badly," Britt replied.

ROD STEWART

BRITT EKLAND

They glided over other subjects, Britt admitting that insasmuch as Rod's 30, "I am the older woman." He began telling her about New Orleans. "Every street corner has a Dixie band and they close off the roads, darling," Britt said, "You must take me there, darling." They kissed and claved some more.

Stewart was here promoting a new album, "Atlantic Crossing," which he wrote, and he said, "The best track, I think, is 'Three-Time Loser.'"

"That's a song about a venereal disease," he said.

"Somebody had a venereal disease three times?"

He nodded. "But you wouldn't know it if I hadn't told you because I'm very discreet with the lyrics. How did I get on that subject? There's a lack of things to write about and it's very topical, of course."

"But not very romantic."

"The other side has romance."

HE'D BE giving up England because of the high taxes.

"As long as I'm a musician it's good for me to be nomadic," he said. "And it's very easy to get into a rock and roll rut in England. You get a house in the country and go to a lot of parties that have nothing to do with music. Besides, there's the press. The British press is hung up on trivia."

"Trivial, like me and me missus," he said, stopping to kiss Britt again.

"How do you feel about drugs?" I asked.

"Neither one of us have been into drugs," Rod said. Because he has a sense of humor, he couldn't resist saying, "Why, do you want some?"

Today's Best Laugh: Henny Youngman says he dreamed his wife was Sophia Loren: "and all night she kept nagging me in Italian."

Wish I'd Said That: The Louisville (Ky.) Sparks claims the cost of mailing a letter is a bargain: "Where else can you have thousands of people working eleven days for only a dime?"

Remembered Quote: "I drink to make other people interesting." — George Jean Nathan, Reader's Digest Treasury of Modern Quotations.

Earl's Pearls: There's a new drink for drivers who insist on having one for the road. It's a martini with a white stripe down the middle.

Chief selection nears; Kortz lauded

By ROBERT GORE
Staff Writer

Selection of a new Long Beach police chief will begin within two weeks, according to City Manager John R. Mansell, who expressed confidence in Acting Chief Ralph G. Kortz.

The city manager emphasized, however, that it has not been decided whether to accept nationwide or statewide applications, or to keep the post within the department.

Several names have been submitted by interested parties, he revealed, but added that applications are not being accepted. Mansell is responsible for appointing a new chief, subject to City Council confirmation.

"Certainly we've heard from people outside of city government—it's only natural," he explained, but would not disclose whose names have been put forward.

"I am extremely pleased with Chief Kortz' activities," Mansell commented, "he's done an excellent job. He's a man who speaks bluntly, honestly and fairly."

Mansell also praised deputy chiefs Willis Platt, Maurice Wishon and Robert Hill. "They're all very qualified," he said, and stated that "I would hope" Kortz, 63 and a 41-year veteran, would apply for the permanent post.

Kortz was appointed by Mansell to temporarily fill the post vacated by the July 1 retirement of former Chief William Meoney. Platt's appointment was also a temporary one made by Mansell.

The acting chief will be entitled to an assistant chief's retirement benefits, his former post, unless he gains the permanent appointment, according to city officials.

Two days after he took office, Kortz reassigned five captains and five lieutenants in one of the biggest job shuffles in the history of the department.

"We felt a need for some changes," said Jack O'Neil, deputy city manager and public safety coordinator.

O'Neil said he and Kortz had discussed the changes and felt that they would aid the career development of the individuals involved. He said that keeping high officers in the same positions "is not necessarily conducive to efficient or effective operations."

The rotation of department heads is desirable, O'Neil said, "but it isn't always done in some areas."

More reassignments are planned, O'Neil said. Kortz, who was reported on vacation, was not available for comment.

Long Beach Police Officers Association President Harry Duple called Kortz "a strong and fair chief—and I stress the word fair. We would be in favor of Chief Kortz" becoming the permanent chief.

"I would hope the city manager's office would confer with the POA before a permanent selection is made," Duple said, "to get the feelings of the men."

"We will consult with several interested parties, including the POA," said the city manager.

Mansell and O'Neil both said the morale in the department was at its highest point in several years, including that of both patrolmen and officers.

This view was supported by Duple, who one year ago was involved in a bitter wage dispute with Mansell.

"The men seem to be quite happy," Duple noted. "There have been no complaints on the changes (Kortz' reassignments). It appears the guys are sitting back to see if there's any reason why they shouldn't like them (the personnel changes)."

The selection process to fill the position, which pays about $36,000 a year, will begin just after the new council members receive a briefing on the police department from Kortz on Aug. 26, O'Neil said.

The briefing is part of a series of presentations from city department heads that each new council receives, O'Neil said.

O'Neil will make a recommendation on the extent of the search procedure to the city manager, Mansell outlined, and he will then decide how to proceed.

Once the selection procedures are settled on, applications will be accepted within 60 days, Mansell said. The actual selection date will depend on the number of applicants and other factors, he explained.

The options are nationwide, statewide or LBPB-only searches, or to confirm the appointment of Kortz, O'Neil said. He has been consulting with academic and police experts for the last month, O'Neil noted.

A criminal justice project committee from the National League of Cities is scheduled to review LBPB soon, O'Neil said, in order to gain information on some innovative programs in the department and to make recommendations.

Mansell said he based his opinion on the high morale on information gleaned from personal contacts with all levels of police officers.

"I go out and talk to the men—and I ride with guys I think have different ideas about the direction of the department," he commented.

Pilot project

Hothouse lobster nearly a reality

By MOLLY BURRELL
Staff Writer

Lobster lovers rejoice! Young scientists in La Jolla are perfecting the hothouse lobster and the ways of quantity farming.

Increased abundance and perhaps lower prices are possible within a couple of years, they calculate.

A domestic farming project in a laboratory under the pier at Scripps Institute of Oceanography is the model, and the several hundred residents therein will never see the bottom of a real sea.

Which won't bother a single specimen of Homarus americanus in the least. All are thriving in solitary cells, immersed in fresh running warm sea water, fed on brine shrimp and a Purina shrimp food mix. Removed from their North Atlantic Coast cold water habitat and insulated from predators, they grow at a rate three times that of their native locale. From egg to edible takes two years in La Jolla, six or seven in Maine.

AND the flavor, texture and color of the La Jolla domestics is every bit as good as the eastern wild crustacean, asserts project director Jon van Olst of San Diego State University.

As good as they taste, lobsters also have good taste: they eat each other.

The problem is, they do it at such a voracious rate they practically eliminate each other in the earliest stages of their lives, van Olst explains—another reason why each denizen in the La Jolla lab has its own private quarters.

VAN OLST, co-director Richard Ford, research associate James M.

Carlberg, and a staff of assistants center their lab work at Scripps and also direct a similar operation at the San Diego Gas and Electric Company plant near Carlsbad.

At the latter, warm water effluents from the steam electric generating station are mixed with the seawater and raise its temperature 15 degrees. That makes it between 70 and 85 most of the year compared with water in the 50s and 60s in the northeastern coastal waters. The La Jolla waters are unheated but the ambient temperature runs around 68-70 through the summer.

Van Olst, 31, came to the project with a master's degree in marine biology and after two years in the Peace Corps in Chile. He works in cut-off levis, T-shirt and zoris, and is dedicated to the proposition that aquaculture is a vital key to answering world hunger problems.

HE EXPLAINS: "Even though supplies of food fish are not dangerously diminished at the moment, fishermen are having to go farther and farther and stay longer to obtain their catches. Common sense tells us the day will come when supply will fail. Before that day we've got to get into fish farming on a big scale. What we're doing here is a pilot, a variation of a process that's been used for years in Japan."

The difference is the self-contained, compact indoor environment.

BEFORE THEY arrived at this, however, the project, centered on studies of the native California lobster, Panulirus interruptus, from 1967 to 1970. After discovering its delicate and extended larval stage precluded large scale breeding and nurturing, they decided not to farm them. (The California native needs six months to reach miniature adult form, about 3/16ths of an inch in length. Homarus needs only 10 days in a warm tank to reach the same stage.)

Subsequently, they transplanted the eastern natives into local waters where they promptly overpowered the clawless California lobsters and devoured quantities of the California market crab on which they depend for much of their food. Project leaders ruled out further transplants in the interest of Panulirus' survival.

Three years ago they built their first hatchery in an old seawater tank beneath the Scripps pier and began importing Homarus americanus. Two years ago they set up the lab in Carlsbad. This year they have funds to build a pilot plant they hope to locate somewhere on the coast in Los Angeles County and in which Van Olst figures they could raise 100,000 lobsters on a four-acre site.

IF HEAT IS the catalyst, low-cost feed is also an essential factor in an economical lobster farm, Van Olst declares.

Each animal consumes about four pounds of food before reaching market size—one pound. Its favorite is brine shrimp, but at the going rate of $1.50 a pound that puts the lobster out of sight price-wise, he explains.

Thus, the La Jolla homarus get a substitute after its first few months: a marine chow which looks like brownish broken spaghetti and sells for about 24 cents a pound. Van Olst's assistants mix into this large amounts of pelagic red crabs so their lobsters get plenty of carotenoid pigment and maintain their own reddish cast. The bigger ones also get occasional rations of mussels, clams and squid, depending on price and supply.

VAN OLST calculates that a commercial farm with continuous production of 100,000 pounds of lobster per year would need 60 females hatching eggs every month. Each batch numbers about 3,000, and they cluster like caviar under her tail. They must be fertilized within 48 hours of the time she molts and loses her shell for a new and larger one, Van Olst explains.

That number of females would be difficult to obtain in their native habitat, he says, and one of the project's major objectives is to develop adequate supplies for potential farmers. They also want to complete testing of half a dozen

New Head Start funding formula

A proposed new Head Start funding formula, aimed at ending an impasse within the Long Beach Commission on Economic Opportunity, is the focus of discussion in the city's poverty war agency.

The impasse arose in June over the issue of centralized versus decentralized funding for the $666,300 federally financed program for 420 preschool youngsters. The disagreement involved the LBCEO's decision to take over the purse strings from the delegate agencies, a decision which was strongly protested by those agencies.

The succeeding controversy placed the entire funding in jeopardy since the centralized funding proposal failed to get the required approval of the Head Start Parent Policy Council, according to Head Start officials.

In an effort to iron out the differences, the commission's finance and program committee this week adopted a formula which would transfer the LBCEO's funding and responsibilities for three of its operations to the direct control of the Regional Office of Child Development in San Francisco and also maintain present funding for three months.

If the commission's board of directors ratifies the plan at its meeting next Thursday, the new formula will be offered to the regional office as a budget proposal to secure money for the coming year's Head Start programs.

Only minor opposition has surfaced against the new formula.

"I think we've got a solution to the Head Start problem," said Bud Weisbart, the commission's new director. "I'm happy with it."

Prior to the new proposal, directors of the three subsidiary Head Start programs—the East Long Beach Neighborhood Center, the League of United Latin-American Citizens (LULAC) and Hawaiian Gardens, had charged that the commission's centralized funding policy would deteriorate their Head Start programs.

Sculptures in sand to close sea festival

Aspiring sand sculptors will convene at 10 a.m. today on the beach at Junipero Avenue to compete in the 10th annual Sea Festival contest which marks the closing day of the two-week celebration.

The contest, sponsored by the Long Beach Regional Arts Council, is open to entrants in three categories: children 16 and under, recreational groups and commercial groups.

Competitors must check in at 10 a.m. with work crews and equipment, and the judging ends at 2 p.m.

In another finale event to the 15-day festival, water skiers from South Africa, England, Australia and the United States will gather from noon until 5 p.m. at Marine Stadium for the International Speed Ski Jamboree.

People Talk

F.C. Anderson

HIS MOTHER thinks he's crazy, and even the lizards and road runners are dubious about his chances. But 22-year-old John C. Eichinger of Seal Beach is confident he can bicycle the 120 miles between Joshua National Monument and Palm Springs without incident next weekend.

John is well armed for his duel in the sun. His medium-priced, 10-speed Centurion LeMans bicycle has yet to let him down; his air pump works, and he has an ample supply of salt tablets and spare tires and tubes.

And if that isn't enough, he has a cause to serve—Sandlarks, the Long Beach Auxiliary of the Children's Home Society of California. John supplies the leg-power and the stamina, and his prospective sponsors—you, you and you—can pledge a dime a mile for his ride.

Pledges are being accepted by Mrs. Mary Jane Haton, a member of the auxiliary. Her telephone numbers are (213) 598-7726 or (714) 894-2695.

John Eichinger is dedicated to the work of the Sandlarks, who in 1976 will celebrate their 25th year of service to children. The organization was formerly devoted primarily to adoptions, now it includes practically all child welfare services, among them group counseling for young single parents.

John looks like one of the few good men the Marine Corps is trying to find. His hair is short, his shoulders are doorway wide and his muscles are those you would expect to find in a young man who threw the hammer for the track team at Cal Poly, Pomona, where last June he earned a bachelor of science degree in zoology.

HE HAS BEEN admitted to graduate school at Long Beach State University, and this fall will begin work on his master's in biology. This indicates that the muscle in his biceps hasn't taken up residence between his ears.

Bicycling through the Mojave Desert has been John's dream for a long time, so he decided to make it come true, prepping with weight-lifting, jogging and 40-mile bike caners.

"My greatest distance on the bike has been 70 miles—between Hacienda Heights and San Bernardino. No, I don't make it a round trip, although I probably could have. I was pumping effortlessly at the end of the ride."

John said he will be driven to Joshua National Monument early Saturday. He plans to do a lot of riding before the sun comes up and realizes he's trespassing. He'll hibernate during the hottest part of the day, then take to the road again in the late afternoon, making camp at Cottonwood Springs Saturday night.

"I figure Cottonwood Springs to be 56 miles from Joshua National Monument, or just a little less than half way to my goal. Sunday's ride—he hopes—will take him to Palm Springs by way of Indio, with arrival ticketed for early evening.

He expects to find temperatures of 120 degrees or more in the Indio area, or enough heat "to melt off at least five pounds."

He may be underestimating his weight loss. Some years ago Dodger pitcher Don Drysdale estimated he lost 12 pounds hurling a day game at St. Louis when the temperature was in the high 90s.

Fortunately, John Eichinger is detouring the St. Louis Cardinals' baseball park.

WEIGHT LOSS, however, is not young Eichinger's only challenge.

"I have to check with the Highway Patrol to see if my bicycle will be permitted on Interstate 10. I think it is, but I'm keeping my fingers crossed."

John works parttime for Haton and Associates, an insurance adjusting agency in Westminster, which is operated by Niles J. Haton, Mary Jane's husband.

"We're kept pretty busy investigating medical malpractice claims," John said. "And that reminds me—I have to work Monday morning. I wonder what kind of shape I'll be in?"

"If you sit down on the job Monday, you won't be able to get up," I told him, remembering my 20-mile, three-speed ride with the Camp Fire Girls.

Incidentally, I hope the Camp Fire Girls don't read this piece. It might give them ideas which include a columnist melting all over Death Valley.

John spoke of possible heavy winds and sandstorms, egg-trying heat, the turbulence kicked up by swooshing Greyhound buses, and vultures circling in the sky. It was so graphic that I tried to burn a couple of salt water tablets. But he declined my request, saying he would need all the help he could get.

John's fiancee, Denise Belfrey, an English major at UCLA, thinks his ride is "a neat idea." It is—on paper, the only way most of us would make the trip.

The FBI and the Klan

The FBI's admission that it conducted a massive campaign of harassment of the Ku Klux Klan has several disturbing aspects.

One is that these FBI activities went far beyond normal law enforcement purposes, as did other FBI harassment of left-wing groups.

IN AT LEAST one case, a Klan member apparently lost his job because of FBI-inspired complaints to his employer about his Klan affiliation. In other cases, the FBI was apparently less interested in acquiring information about the Klan than it was in frightening Klan members into thinking that they were surrounded by FBI informants.

At the same time that the FBI was spending the taxpayers' money on this campaign of intimidation, it was apparently providing an important share of the Klan's income. In 1965, when the FBI estimated total Klan membership at nearly 10,000, FBI records indicate that nearly 2,000 of these members were FBI informants. During one 12-month period, more than 70 per cent of Klan recruits were FBI informants.

Did that influx of informants into the Klan give that organization an impetus to keep growing?

AND HOW much of the Klan's finances came from tax money, paid into the Klan by FBI informants in the form of dues and assessments?

Did the FBI, in short, strengthen the organization at the same time it sought to weaken it?

And is either strengthening or weakening a legal organization — no matter how offensive its philosophy might be to most Americans — any business of a federal law enforcement agency?

THERE WAS Klan violence, and the FBI had an obligation to track it down and to prevent it where possible. But it appears that FBI infiltration of the Klan went beyond legitimate law enforcement purposes.

The program under which the FBI conducted these activities has been disbanded. New FBI guidelines proposed by Attorney General Edward Levi should prevent such programs of harassment in the future. We can hope that FBI Director Clarence Kelley will add his voice to Levi's in assuring the nation that the FBI has returned to its traditional law enforcement role and will not again stray from it.

better than being a descending one.

The company is selling more textiles to clothing and carpet manufacturers, and it advises that "those improvements are being translated into a turnaround."

IN THE PLASTICS business, which has been in a different rut, Monsanto reports that "the bottom of the trough was reached in March." In another line, company sales were also down — or, as the report puts it, "there was a softening in demand for rubber and specialty chemicals." And yet another division found its "profit picture . . . affected by soft demand for plastic products and electronics."

"We anticipate that 1975 will be the second-best year in Monsanto's history," the report concludes.

We hope it is the second best year in all our histories. All we have to do is hit the bottom of the trough and translate a few improvements into a turnaround.

Our inconsistent legislators

SACRAMENTO — Legislators are criticized constantly and usually illogically for some of their fringe benefits, such as daily expense allowances, automobiles, credit cards, and the like.

But none of these benefits is as valuable to a legislator as the legislative tool known as a resolution.

RESOLUTIONS ARE really neat things for lawmakers. They help give the appearance of Doing Something, frequently under the guise of causing a study to be made, which is the best way to give the appearance of Doing Something while actually delaying doing anything.

There are different kinds of resolutions. Some "memorialize Congress" to do something; others direct state agencies to do something. Still another kind is used to praise individuals or organizations.

A boys' roller hockey team recently showed up, in full uniform, to receive its commendatory resolution after winning a tournament. Newsmen have been known to receive a resolution for winning an award, and nearby barroom guitar players and restaurateurs have received resolutions for providing solace and sustenance.

Some resolutions should have a very serious purpose, and should be valuable, and perhaps they are. There are resolutions that state the position of the California Legislature on highly controversial subjects, and the lawmakers would like to think that Congress really cares that the California Legislature cares.

MAYBE Congress does. Maybe the legislature really pays attention to the resolutions sent it by city councils or boards of supervisors. Maybe.

Last week two resolutions concerning aerosol spray containers whizzed out of two Assembly committees with little debate, with recommendations that they were so noncontroversial that they could be voted on by the full Assembly without debate.

The aerosol issue is about as noncontroversial as offshore oil drilling, which helps explain just how substantive the two resolutions had to be to be deemed not to need debate.

The aerosol issue, by the way, gives critics of inconsistency an opportunity to carp.

IT IS EITHER fact or theory, depending on who's talking, that the gas used to propel the deodorant out of aerosol spray cans releases chloride into the air. The chloride eventually interacts with ozone high in the atmosphere, causing the ozone to change into oxygen.

Ozone acts as a filter of the sun's rays, and without the ozone the earth would receive unfiltered rays and neither animal nor vegetable would long prosper.

So, say some folks frequently identified as liberals, stop selling aerosol spray containers.

Hold off, say other folks, usually conservative. Production of the containers and the products in them is a multibillion-dollar industry. Don't make the use of aerosols illegal without solid proof that it is harmful.

Bob Schmidt

View From Our State Bureau

BUT, SAY THE liberals, shouldn't we, just in case it is harmful, halt production?

Just for fun, replace the word aerosol with the word marijuana.

Marijuana might be harmful, those people who seem to be conservatives say, and so people should be prohibited from using it for safety's sake. Just in case it is harmful.

Wrong way to go, say the liberals. Don't make the use of marijuana illegal without solid proof that it is harmful.

THE STATE of Oregon decided that the case against marijuana did not justify legal prohibitions against its use, and passed a law.

Then the same state decided that the case against aerosols (only recently made and, as with marijuana, without unanimity in scientific circles) does justify legal prohibitions against their use, and passed a law.

"Do I contradict myself?" Walt Whitman once wondered. "Very well then, I contradict myself. (I am large, I contain multitudes.)"

The liberal and the conservative, each is, too, a multitude.

Letters to the editor

Trust LB council

EDITOR:

The editorial page of the I, P-T for some time has shown considerable improvement in its content and coverage, but its editorial of Aug. 5 on "Improving air service" should never have been written and I'll tell you why.

The I, P-T and a close-knit group have more or less run the city throughout the years, and although the public squeaked a lot, that's about all it amounted to.

However, for some time we have been getting people on the city council dedicated to benefiting the city as a whole and not select groups. The culmination of this progress was the recent city council action limiting city commissions to two terms. Well, what happened? It threw the I, P-T into a tizzy.

This meant that some of the incestuous committees would lose members; some of whom had served three, four or five terms. The paper in its quaint way planted articles like — if you don't have experience, you don't have a thing. Or — only our select groups know the score. I think these just stiffened the council members' backs (at least most of them).

So now we get to the I, P-T editorial fronting for PSA for the umpteenth time, saying that PSA should be given increased flights.

PSA has always had as their prime target using Long Beach as their Los Angeles Basin base. This is fine for them. They don't have the hassle of LAX, no parking problems and they draw from the surrounding areas. The people from Orange County just love it. So we end up with a great roaring jet airport for the benefit of a few Long Beach selfish Chamber of Commerce types.

The paper mentions the convenience of conventions, etc. We should operate a jet airport in the direct center of the city for a few Las Vegas types? Don't believe it. Disneyland packs 50 to 60 thousand people a day in their park, and there's no airport in the area.

The damage to the quality of life and all it encompasses is simply not worth it. The paper mentions that increasing the flights for PSA would set no precedent. Well, you can't trust the paper, and you can't trust PSA. Who do you trust? The new city council, that's who.

For four years we tried to get PSA when taking off the diagonal to get at least 1,900 feet higher before turning. What did we always get? The horse laugh. We went to Craig Hosmer, and presto he had the FAA put out regulations that planes taking off the diagonal must be 1,500 feet high before turning. This solved the problem and the west side can thank us and Craig Hosmer for that.

So get to the 25L runway item. PSA made an agreement with the city council to use the runway, and what did they do? Ran in heavier planes and started using the diagonal. This was done unilaterally, and to John Mansell's everlasting credit, he cracked down on PSA.

Reg Dupuy, our association manager, has been working with the city engineering department on plans for strengthening the runway for heavier planes, but this is a long time away, and will take lots of money.

The paper says the residents wouldn't notice the increased flights. Just because they say it doesn't make it so. Just ask the people who live there.

The expansion of the airport runways was voted by the people of Long Beach for the direct benefit of Douglas, which we all agree on, and indirectly for general aviation. The general aviation group ought to get down on their knees and thank the city council, us and others for trying to preserve the airport for Douglas and their use, and to a limited extent for general commercial use.

Another ringer tossed in the pit: the paper mentions an improved terminal. Another operative word. They get them in rather slyly. And at last the final cliché: it will help the downtown area. Another operative phrase.

The I, P-T in its infinite wisdom has had a long time to come up with ideas for the downtown area, with its "organization." You see the result.

We believe the new city council will solve this problem and make Long Beach a better place to live. This in turn will attract competent people and industry.

Bugliosi for DA

EDITOR:

Since the death of Joseph Busch, I have observed that there is considerable competition for his crucial office of district attorney of Los Angeles County.

I feel that one man is qualified, without reservation, for this job. That man is Vincent T. Bugliosi. He is more than competent. He is galvanic. Destiny has placed him at a crossroad. He is a man for this time.

Relax, George

EDITOR:

George Robeson did it again. I'm trying to recover from a fit of laughter upon reading his column on the male purse, called Deja Vu, he won as door prize at a men's fashion show.

To set Mr. Robeson's mind at ease, "deja vu" means "already seen." Obviously, the shy, American-reared George is not one to risk his virility at the expense of the French. But do the matadors not wear ruffled shirts, too? And 200 years ago men wore wigs and fancy finery!

I assure you, George, that designer Blackwell's intentions are materialistic as well as marketable and, yes, colorful. In no way do they represent weapons to destroy the consumer's moral codes, be that consumer American, French, male or female.

Besides, according to Mr. Robeson's secretary, his reporter's paraphernalia would never fit in a purse anyway.

End double standard

EDITOR:

Along with the cheers that a few of the liberated young set will give for the First Lady, there will be some that will reflect the thought of their parents and stand aghast at the moral issue involved in the manner which it was presented.

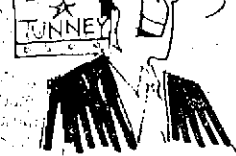

The First Lady wasn't asked if she thought it permissible for one of her sons to participate in premarital relations, and I wonder what her answer would have been to that. I wonder if she thinks that the male should not carry the same level of responsibility. The archaic reasoning that the male cannot be held accountable for his amorous activities must change. After all, what mother or father wants their sweet, pure, undefiled daughter to marry a promiscuous young man? This is tantamount to sentencing her to a life of doubt and regret.

If we are ever going to stem the broken home statistics rampant today, if we are ever going to stem the rise in venereal disease and broken lives, we are going to have to educate our children — our sons included — that it is important that they both observe the rule of chastity. It is just as important that the bridegroom be as proud of himself as he is of his blushing bride; that she can be just as proud of him as she is of her own chastity. The door of doubt and fear and the desire to experiment in infidelity will be closed once and for all.

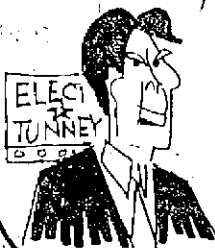

There is so much to be gained from an outlook such as this; there is so much difference between the words love and lust to change the directions of a civilization that is traveling the "Broadway" to destruction.

What the CIA needs now

WASHINGTON — The Central Intelligence Agency may come out of its penitient period with its powers and privileges still intact. The calls for reform have produced more promises than changes. Abuses have been halted, but the causes have gone uncorrected.

ALL THE WHILE, the CIA has been slipping back into the shadows. The scandal-weary public is tiring of sordid spy stories. The investigations on Capitol Hill are running out of steam.

Sensing that the worst is over, CIA Chief William Colby is trying to put the lid back on. President Ford has joined him in warning that the investigations could impair the collection of vital intelligence.

Colby contends that the chastened spy agency won't again overreach its legal limits. There is nothing wrong with the CIA, he insists, that the right indoctrination and discipline can't cure. Once the authorities on high define the agency's mission with a little more clarity and lay down the dictum that abuses won't be tolerated, promises Colby, the CIA can be counted upon to operate within constitutional constraints.

On a "strengthened" civilian advisory board to make the CIA behave. The Rockefeller reformers would grant the board full powers for "assessing the quality of foreign intelligence collection." There is something dismayingly familiar about this. Back in 1961, the board was reformed with powers, according to the old charter, to "conduct a continuing review and assessment of foreign intelligence activities."

In other words, the board has always had the powers Nelson

Jack Anderson with Les Whitten

Rockefeller so piously would now bestow upon it. He should be aware of this, since he has served on the board. He should also be familiar with its history of acquiescence to the CIA.

PERIODICALLY, CIA officials have been called before the board for questioning. The sessions have always been sober but sympathetic, with the sodality that characterizes gentlemen who share grave secrets.

Participants have assured us that they have often pressed reforms upon the CIA. But apparently, these have been more structural than substantive. The CIA officials always listen solemnly to their civilian advisers. Thereafter, the officials call meetings, issue directives, move the furniture around and otherwise create the impression that changes will be made. And then they quietly return to their same old routines.

The cozy relationship between the watchdogs and the watched is exemplified by the board's executive secretary, Wheaton Byers. My associate, Jim Grady, asked him for the phone numbers of board members so we could solicit their comments.

BYERS indignantly refused, saying we wrote a "scurrilous" column that printed classified information. Evidently, he considered the phone numbers of the members classified, since he refused to give them out. We reached several of them anyway; with rare exceptions, we found them as protective as Byers toward the CIA.

This seems to be the attitude of everyone close to the CIA. They agree with Colby who wants to make it a crime for newsmen to publish classified information. The legislation he has in mind, of course, would authorize the CIA director to determine what should be classified.

That would give the nation's spy chief total censorship power over all news that comes out of the CIA. As his way of reform, in other words, he would put the emphasis not on correcting CIA abuses but on keeping them out of the newspapers.

CERTAINLY HE can argue that the CIA would not be under fire today if he had already possessed this extraordinary power. The abuses would have gone unpublished, uninvestigated and, therefore, uncorrected.

The Rockefeller commission, if it isn't willing to go quite as far as Colby, comes perilously close. The commission wants to make it a "criminal offense for employees or former employees of the CIA willfully to divulge to any unauthorized person classified information pertaining to foreign intelligence or the collection thereof obtained during the course of their employment."

If the CIA is to regain the trust of the people, it must allow more, not less light on its activities. No other nation has been as successful as the United States in maintaining a free society. It requires a powerful spotlight to expose the abuses that threaten our freedom.

Footnote: The Rockefeller commission has also come out, four-square, against domestic spying. But the recommendation leaves a handy loophole which permits a little benign spying if there should be "a clear danger to agency facilities, operations or personnel." Of course, this was precisely the rationale used by the CIA to begin its illegal domestic spying in the first place. What the CIA needs, clearly, is a tough new charter spelling out the rights and wrongs of intelligence operations.

The risks in being right

Not long ago I was right about something. I knew it for an absolute fact, an indisputable certainty. It was a rare moment. Like most people, I am almost always wrong about whatever the business at hand may be, and for an instant it was exhilarating to sense that I was the only person in a room full of people who was absolutely right.

In fact, it was not a moment for exultation. It was a moment of extreme peril. There are few things more dangerous to social or political success than being right. Persons who are truly lucky never find themselves suffering from this affliction.

ONE OF THE most successful politicians in recent times has been wrong on absolutely everything for the past 25 years and has been regularly rewarded with re-election by vast majorities.

This is not surprising. Most people are wrong most of the time. It is the human condition. Their hearts go out to a man who is so thoroughly one of them that his only superiority consists in an ability to be wrong even more consistently than they. "Good old Bill!" they say. "He's my kind of guy."

BY CONTRAST, there used to be a man in the United States Senate who was right about everything. In 10 years of watching him perform, I never saw an occasion on which he was not utterly, breathtakingly right.

He clearly saw distant dangers to the country and how they could be avoided. He knew precisely what was ailing the economy and how it could be healed. He even knew what was wrong with the Senate and forcefully explained how it could be corrected. What's more, he never flinched from giving the Senate an irrefutable argument illustrating how right he was.

Time and time again, this poor afflicted wretch saw his small efforts to improve man's lot gleefully voted down by majorities of 90 to 1. It is a hard fate to be right. It is a curse to be right and not be able to keep it a secret.

THE MORE clever politicians are very good about handling themselves when right, as they occasionally are. They sense that to be right is to be in danger, to court dislike and possibly unemployment. They handle their rightness like herpetologists nursing a king cobra, often cursing the circumstance that compels them to see the light, all too aware that most of us who are wrong strike with sharp fangs unless we are carefully jollied.

Russell Baker

New York Times News Service

In business and social life, the person who is unashamedly right is an intolerable lout to be disposed of by transfer to the Samoan branch office or struck from the guest list as a tiresome bore. In politics, he is often punished by dis-election.

Politicians have met this problem with characteristic elasticity. Their trick is to avoid being right at the wrong time. One of the most fatal judgments one politician can deliver against another is, "he was right too soon."

WAYNE MORSE and Ernest Gruening were "right too soon" when they cast the only two Senate votes against Lyndon Johnson's full-scale entry into the Vietnam war. The fact that great numbers of politicians eventually found the war to be disastrous did not much reduce the feeling among Washington types that people who came out against it "too soon" were, if not wrong, at least too insensitive to the nuances of timing about rightness to be fully skilled in the governmental art.

Not surprisingly, Hubert Humphrey, who bided his time to be right about Vietnam, is once again discussed as a presidential sort of fellow, while George McGovern, who was right too soon, is not discussed at all.

Everett Dirksen stated the politician's philosophy of being right when he finally switched his position on civil rights and declared, 100 years after the Emancipation Proclamation, that fair treatment for black people was "an idea whose time has come."

THIS IS another way of saying that it is wrong to be right until the multitudes are so busy being wrong about something else — the Vietnam war, in this case — that they no longer much care.

It isn't particularly surprising that we don't want politicians being right soon enough about a-borning disasters to save us from the worst. Nor is it surprising that politicians oblige us.

The thing I was absolutely right about not long ago was the population of the United States in 1920. Everybody else in the room was wrong by at least 10 million people. I could have pulled down the almanac and proved that I was the only soul there who knew what he was talking about and sent them away feeling stupid. I didn't.

There were people there whose guest lists I didn't want to be stricken from. Later, one or two will get the population figure right, but I shall not remind them that I had it right all along. I don't want to be stigmatized as one of those kooks who are always right too soon.

The forgotten Americans

MEXICO CITY — In the last few days, Mexico's foreign secretary, Emilio O. Rabasa, has been in Moscow signing an economic, scientific and technological agreement with the Soviet Union and the other members of the Communist economic bloc.

At the same time, Mexico's President Luis Echeverria, who is building support as a "third world" candidate to succeed Kurt Waldheim as secretary general of the United Nations, was completing a three-week trip from India, the Middle East and Northern Africa to Cuba.

James Reston

New York Times News Service

THESE EVENTS are reminders of two significant facts: first, that while the United States has been preoccupied with other parts of the world, our neighbors in the Western Hemisphere have been strengthening their ties with Europe, Japan and the Soviet Union. And second, that while the Soviet Union has been building its sphere of influence in Eastern Europe, and China has been attempting the same in Southeast Asia, the U.S. "special relationship" with Latin America has been declining.

Ten years ago, when the cold war was in full swing and the Cuban crises were bitter memories, Latin America acquiesced, though grudgingly, in the economic and political dominance of the United States.

The situation is different now. The cold war has abated. Cuba is less of a public issue, while the U.S. domination of Panama and the canal has become the most alarming issue since the Bay of Pigs — and is now regarded in Latin America as a major threat to Kissinger's Latin American policy.

ECONOMICALLY, with the increased industrialization of the major Latin American states, the direction, volume and terms of trade in the hemisphere are changing dramatically. Latin America seeks more access to U.S. markets; and Latin America's markets are becoming more important to the multinational U.S. corporations, the control of which is causing new problems in this part of the world.

Secretary of State Kissinger and William Rogers, his assistant secretary for Latin American affairs, are aware of all this, but Kissinger is preoccupied with other problems.

In the short run he is probably right, but in the long run the security of the United States, and even its relations with the rest of the world, may very well depend on the stability of the Americas as a whole.

ROOSEVELT IN his Good Neighbor Policy, Kennedy with his Alliance for Progress, Johnson in his Punta del Este talk of an American Common Market, and Kissinger in his offer of a "new dialogue," all recognized the importance of a New Deal for the New World — but it has been a long time coming, and the problem deepens.

The danger of a guerrilla war against U.S. control of Panama is a real threat to our hemisphere policy. The danger of illegal Mexican immigration into the United States — 710,000 illegal Mexicans were arrested in the United States last year — is even more of a menace, with Mexico's population expected to go from its present 60 million to 125 million by the end of the century.

ONE FACT is obvious: The hemisphere is not getting the attention it deserves from the U.S. government, press, radio and television.

This may be one reason Panama is bringing the canal to the point of crisis, and why the Mexicans are making agreements with the Communist economic bloc and identifying themselves with the "third world." They are in trouble at home, and all over Latin America and the Caribbean, and they are trying to get our attention.

Rented typewriter stolen

Beulah M. Ashbrook of Silver Springs, Md. told Long Beach police someone stole a rented IBM Selectric typewriter from her unlocked room at the Golden Sails Inn, 6285 E. Pacific Coast Highway.

She told officers the door to her room couldn't be locked, that before the theft she had reported the problem to motel employees, and that they said the matter would be taken care of.

The typewriter, owned by Long Beach Office Equipment Co., was valued at $435.

Film booth robbed of $70

An employee at a film booth at 110 E. Pacific Coast Highway told police a man walked up and engaged her in conversation, joked, and asked her name before finally saying, "I don't have any more time," and robbing her of $70.

The clerk said the robber struck her in the face with a sack which contained something hard, and the shape of the item in the sack looked like that of a handgun.

She complied with his order to put all the money in another sack, then the man took the money and walked away through an alley, she said.

Gambler shot in robbery

A shotgun blast injured one of 13 Lennox-area gamblers who were robbed early Saturday, and another gambler broke his leg when he jumped out a window to escape the robbery, sheriff's deputies said.

Both the shotgun victim, Ronald Harang, 29 and the man who jumped, Edmund Bell, 43, both of Los Angeles, were in fair condition at Morningside Hospital in Los Angeles. Harang was wounded in the arm.

Deputies said the robbery took place about 4 a.m. when four men broke down the door of a house at 1131 W. 88th St. and ordered the 13 crapshooters up against the wall.

Bell saved his $4,000 winnings by jumping out the window, deputies said, but the robbers made off with $2,000 in cash and jewelry from the others.

Civilian use of El Toro urged for Orange County

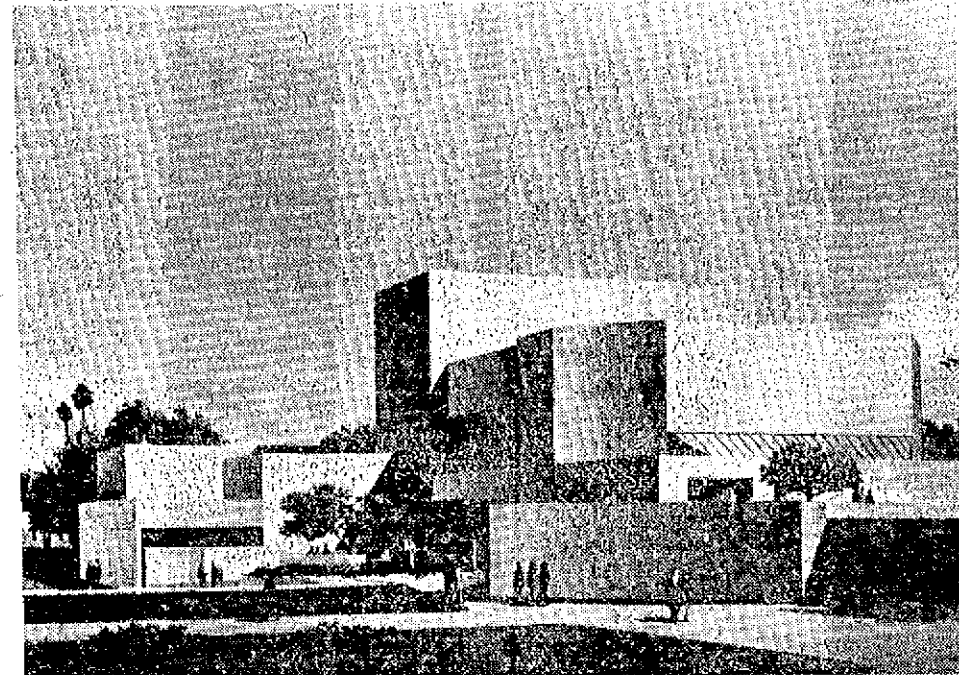

Orange County's long search for another airport could be solved by joint use of El Toro Marine Corps Air Station, Aviation Director Robert J. Bresnahan will tell county supervisors Tuesday.

He also will report that, in his opinion, Los Alamitos Naval Air Station could serve civilian needs, but said it would not be as desirable as El Toro.

He also will tell the county supervisors that jurisdictional problems may preclude use of the military installation at El Toro, which the Leathernecks zealously guard for themselves.

And, Bresnahan noted, there is considerable opposition to joint use now generating in the fast-growing residential areas flanking the air station at El Toro. Bresnahan, who made a months-long study of the county's aviation problems at direction of the supervisors, held that joint use of El Toro is "technically feasible" even though the military says otherwise.

DRAWING OF NEW THEATER AT CAL STATE DOMINGUEZ HILLS

At Dominguez Hills

New theater arts building

Construction of a new $2.2 million Theater Arts building at Cal State Dominguez Hills is under way this week.

The three-story, step-level theater will be located west of the campus mall near the Victoria Street front entrance and is expected to be completed in the fall of 1977.

Highlights of the new building are a 500-seat auditorium designed for multipurpose use, a large foyer which is designed as an exhibition area, and an adjacent outdoor patio for open-air concerts and theatrical productions.

The building also houses an indoor and outdoor scene shop, dressing rooms, an orchestra pit, costume and scene storage areas, and a modern projection and lighting booth which will be used for instructional purposes.

Lighting and acoustics are planned to be on a par with the best college facilities in the state, according to Marvin Laser, dean of the humanities and fine arts department.

"It is our hope," Laser said, "that the new theater will become a major cultural center for South Bay communities."

The building was designed by Beverly Hills architect Daniel L. Dworky and will be constructed by J.B. Allen and Co. of Anaheim.

KOBAYASHI-BERGER-MILON COMET IN LOCAL SKY

The Kobayashi-Berger-Milon comet, so named for three amateur astronomers who discovered it, fades out of sight of Northern Hemisphere viewers this weekend.

But a photographer at Orange Coast College, John R. Sanford, who is an associate professor of photography there, is not unhappy: he got a prized picture of the comet as it passed the double star Mizar and Alcor in the handle of the Big Dipper.

That was the night of Aug. 3, when Sanford was at the Silverado Canyon astronomer's observation site.

His success in taking the remarkable picture, which shows the comet with a long tail, was with use of the college's Schmidt astronomical camera. He made exposures over a six-minute interval.

Sanford, who also teaches the college's observational astronomy course, said that the comet will pass within 23 million miles of the sun on Sept. 5, and soon thereafter will move into a range of visibility in the Southern Hemisphere.

It is officially designated as Comet 1975h, meaning that it is the eighth comet to be discovered this year.

demonstration of the feasibility of aquaculture, it's a highly desirable way to make a living. Where else could he dress like a beach boy and spend the hours with such quiet, unargumentative charges?

Besides he confesses, he really likes them.

"Personally I think they are beautiful," he says.

Then how does he feel about popping them in the boiling pot for his taste tests?

"I feel bad—it's like eating a pet...But they are delicious, I have to admit."

Directors of those delegate agencies insisted direct control under a decentralized formula was the preferable way to provide the underprivileged children with quality nutrition and medical services at their neighborhood classrooms.

The centralized plan proposed transferring nutrition and medical services to one central location, the downtown Head Start office at 601 Pacific Ave.

The commission had maintained that the need to meet increased staff salaries and operation expenses caused by inflation had necessitated the adoption of a centralized funding and service policy for Head Start. This, the commission said, would save money while serving more pre-school children.

At one point a formula to "decentralize" the Head Start program was offered by commission member Henry Toboada, a plan that had included a $50,000 subsidy from the city of Long Beach. This was rejected July 17 by the commission's board by a 7-5 vote with three abstentions.

The commission then forwarded its centralized budget proposal to the San Francisco regional office, but that proposal was returned to Long Beach because it lacked the approval of the Parent Policy Council, as required by federal law.

As Hawaiian Garden's Head Start director Linda Scarlino notes, Head Start directors have asked for additional funds to meet increased expenses caused by inflation.

Home costs soaring, says study report

By BOB GEIVET
Staff Writer

Housing costs in Orange County are rising at more than twice the rate of income growth, and are far outracing inflation, a report said Saturday.

The Committee on Environment, Employment, Economy and Development (CEEED), noted the acceleration in comparing an official Orange County Cost of Housing study in April, and costs currently computed by the First American Title Co. of Santa Ana.

The Cost of Housing study in April put the average new home on the market at a price of $80,550, and said that only 21 per cent of the county's families had sufficient income to qualify to buy such a place.

Today, the First American Title survey said, the average cost of a house is $70,106, and fewer than 15 per cent of county families can qualify to buy a house costing $70,000 or more.

CEEED President Charles M. Trenta, who is executive secretary of the Orange County District Council of Carpenters, warned that "the continued rise in the price of housing is having a demoralizing effect upon those, young and old, who cannot afford adequate shelter."

He lauded "individual county supervisors" for their "recognition and concern over the spiraling costs of housing," and "the subsequent effect upon those in need of shelter," and called for less government controls "as one way of cutting construction costs."

"Government, through myriad regulations, requirements and permit procedures, commissions and codes, has become so entwined in the process and so much a part of the cost of building shelter, that the private sector cannot any longer even begin to address the problems alone."

Trenta warned that "the problems, however, are of crisis proportions, and they must be addressed."

Trenta offered the services of CEEED, an organization of industry and labor, "to join... in searching for solutions to this serious problem which we all share."

He conceded that high money costs, for instance, are "beyond our ability, and yours," but he said that "many problems are locally caused and can be locally corrected."

Services set Tuesday for Mrs. Julia Paine

Mrs. Julia J. Paine, a teacher in the Long Beach schools for 30 years, died Friday at a local convalescent hospital following a brief illness. She was 85.

Services are scheduled for 2:30 p.m. Tuesday at Holton and Son Mortuary, 614 Locust Ave.

Mrs. Paine was a member of the National Retired Teachers' Association and the Ebell Club, and was active in the First Congregational Church.

A native of Minnesota and a graduate of the University of Washington, she moved to Long Beach with her family in the early 1920s.

She is survived by a son and daughter-in-law, Webster and Beatrice Paine of Redondo Beach; two granddaughters and six great-grandchildren.

List of 10 selected Secret Witness cases

The Independent, Press-Telegram's Secret Witness program has resulted in the arrest of 55 criminal suspects and fugitives from justice since the program was inaugurated on June 10, 1972, with rewards totaling $36,000 paid or committed on conviction of suspects waiting trial.

Additional reward money available for informants is specified in the case list below, one of the selected and varying summaries of 10 Secret Witness cases printed in the Independent and Press-Telegram each Sunday and Thursday.

Rewards also will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of suspects in any other major criminal cases, or the apprehension of fugitives from justice, not covered in these summaries.

These rewards will vary in amount depending on the seriousness of the offense, whether among those listed or not, will remain open until such cases are closed or until notification is given in print that the reward is withdrawn.

To ensure eligibility for Secret Witness rewards, informants are required to channel all information DIRECTLY through Secret Witness — that is, to notify Secret Witness FIRST — either by calling the special Secret Witness telephone number or by writing in care of the special Secret Witness post office box.

Today's summaries follow:

—A $2,000 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and murder conviction of the slayer of 42-year old Donna Rae Goodell, found beaten to death in her home at 12280 Briarwood St. in Stanton on April 21, 1975.

—Rewards totaling $2,500 — including $2,000 guaranteed by Secret Witness and $500 pledged by Knights of Columbus Council 3449 — will be paid for information leading to the arrest and murder conviction of the killer of Steven Robert Snedeker, 18-year-old clerk who was found shot to death after an apparent robbery at the H & O Liquor Store, 6069 Cherry Ave., on the night of Jan. 27, 1975.

—A $2,000 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and murder conviction of the slayer of 25-year-old John Richard "Sharpstick" Dekker of Bell Gardens, shot to death by an unknown assailant as he was sitting in the Chit-Chat Bar in Bell Gardens shortly after midnight on Oct. 4, 1972.

—A $500 reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest and arson — burglary conviction of the thieves responsible for the fire and burglary at a warehouse building at 2128 Atlantic Ave. early on May 22, 1975, causing an estimated $40,000 worth of damage to the building and contents, which included thousands of dollars worth of items stored for a City Of Hope rummage sale scheduled for that day.

—A $2,000 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and murder conviction of the slayers of Jose Ballester, 18, of Wilmington, stabbed to death by a group of young men who attacked him as he was walking to his nearby home from a bus stop on I Street near Lakme Avenue at 10:45 p.m. on March 17, 1975.

—A $2,000 reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest and murder conviction of the killer of Ashok N. Parekh, 27-year-old owner of Paul's Market, 755 Magnolia Ave., shot to death during a holdup attempt at his store on Sept. 19, 1974.

—A $500 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and robbery conviction of the ski-masked armed bandit who held up the commercial accounts teller at the Farmers & Merchants Bank branch at 1401 Long Beach Blvd. and escaped with approximately $30,000 on Feb. 18, 1975. The robber was described as a white man about 25 years, 5 feet 10 inches tall, about 160 pounds.

—A $2,000 reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest and murder conviction of the killer of Douglas Rehphol, 32-year-old music teacher moonlighting as an Anaheim taxi driver, found stabbed to death near his cab in an apparent murder-robbery on Sun-kist Road south of Ball Road in the Anaheim area on the night of Oct. 12, 1974.

—A $2,000 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and murder conviction of the killer of Andrea "Trecey" Logan, 5-year-old Long Beach girl found strangled near her home in an alley back of 136 Walnut St. on May 7, 1974.

—A $1,000 reward, including $500 guaranteed by Secret Witness and $500 pledged by store owner Thomas Young, is offered for information leading to the arrest and robbery conviction of the armed bandits who held up Tommy's Liquors, 522 E. Willow St., on Oct. 19, 1974, and fled with cash in excess of $190 plus a quantity of liquor and cigars.

How to become a Secret Witness

Secret Witness seeks information from the public leading to the capture of fugitives and the arrest and conviction of criminals.

For this purpose a guaranteed fund of $100,000 has been established by the Independent, Press-Telegram to be used for rewards of varying amounts.

Identities of informants will be kept secret.

You will be paid a reward if the information you give Secret Witness results in the arrest and conviction of a criminal or the capture of a fugitive in cases publicized in this column. Rewards also will be paid for information given to Secret Witness resulting in arrests and convictions, or the capture of fugitives, in cases not published in Secret Witness.

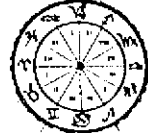

To contact Secret Witness, telephone 436-2526 from 8 a.m. to midnight on weekdays, or from 3 p.m. to 11 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday. Do NOT give us your name. Or write to: Secret Witness, P.O. Box 87, Long Beach, Calif. 90801.

This is how the last page of your "Secret Witness" letter should look after you have typed or printed your information about a crime.

DO NOT SIGN YOUR NAME. Instead, select a code name for yourself . . . any name, as long as it's not your own . . . and place it and a code number at the bottom of your letter. The code number should combine three letters and three numbers in any combination.

Tear off and keep a corner of the last page, with the same code name and number on it. Mail your letter to "Secret Witness," P.O. Box 87, Long Beach, 90801.

YOUR HOROSCOPE by JEANE DIXON

Forecast for MONDAY

Your birthday today: You can face up to the issues that arise at this time in your life, define feasible goals and strive to achieve them if you have the will power. Your coming experience is full of hard choices. Optimism is balanced against limitations and nothing is easy. Today's natives are amiable, carefree, not naturally disposed to meeting the type of challenge that this year poses. Those who are married are most likely to adapt to it.

Aries (March 21-April 19): Go ahead with already made plans. Don't be impatient with people who can't see merit in your new ideas. From an overly optimistic morning, you become more realistic by evening.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): Success depends upon how you use a streak of luck. You have encouragement from substantial individuals but no authority to drop names. Negotiate briskly, but stop short of any final step.

Gemini (May 21-June 20): What you sign for now has a permanent effect upon your life. In handling money, you're the only one able to judge your real requirements and the amount you are willing to sacrifice to get them.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): Don't cry over milk that is not yet spilled and don't dwell upon the past. You have backing that is not obvious to casual observers. Do jobs you can manage alone. Let home matters stand.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): First and last, protect your health and avoid hazardous conditions. It's almost impossible to maintain a steady pace. You take on too much and divide the burden too late to do any good.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't rush into things until you have a clear understanding of the situation. Learn what is expected of you and what you can expect in return. Friends who are involved in their own affairs aren't very sympathetic.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Come to terms with those whose opinions or authority is significant. Anticipate relatives to be distracted and concerned over health and money. Don't participate in a wild goose chase.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stick to what you know, stay right where you are and do your best, regardless of criticism. Friends out-of-sequence move. Gather old hands to do a task this evening.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You're not likely to be satisfied with anything just now. Instead of complaining, get busy and see where future security can be achieved. You attract favorable support soon.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Organize yourself so that this week will run its course a bit more smoothly than last week. Sell ideas; persuade others to help. Get with it this evening to ask that serious question.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Instead of opening with a sales pitch or boasting, set a pattern for the week. Think about what you are doing and what you hope to accomplish in the long run.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): The shortcut of the morning is bound to be the disaster of the evening if you let friends lead you into it. Count on different viewpoints. There's room for improvement; make it yourself.

EMERSON QUIET KOOL AIR CONDITIONERS

5000 BTU

Okay, let's see what's inside this fancy box. Real air conditioning . . . slide-out washable filter, that's good . . . instant installation . . . rust-resistant aluminum cabinet . . . quiet . . . adjustable thermostat. Put it in a sack. I'll take it.

6000 BTU

All the basic features plus (love that word plus) wood-grained front . . . 2-speed fan . . . also heats in the winter. It says, "From the Land of Emerson Quiet Kool." I hope it's a friendly country, we got enough unfriendlies.

129.159.

8000 BTU

10,000 BTU

Add all the foregoing features, plus (that word again) more BTUs, more capacity, a fancier front, hidden controls and you have . . . (I lost the envelope with the answer).

Number eight of a series

Number 8 of 10 reasons why you should increase your newspaper advertising when business is tough:

You say your customers know you and for a while at least they'll keep coming in even if you don't promote? That's partly true, but shortsighted. Remember, one out of five Americans moves every year. So there's a steady flow of your customers out of your market, and a corresponding influx of new folks who don't know you at all. Tell them about yourself.

'FOLKLORICO CORONADO,' ONE OF THE GROUPS TO PERFORM IN FIESTA

FIESTA DE MEXICO SET

Long Beach will take on some of the atmosphere of a Mexican pueblo this week as the "Fiesta de Mexico" unfolds in the downtown shopping area.

The commercial promotion, sponsored by Downtown Long Beach Associates, begins Monday with banners in the Mexican colors (red, white and green) displayed downtown, and the "Mariachi America Band" strolling through the shopping district between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m.

Entry blanks for a contest to win a free one-week airline trip for two to Mexico City will be available in most downtown stores through the week.

Capping the six-day promotion will be a special entertainment Saturday in the 300-block of Pine Avenue.

A Mexican food booth will be set up there, along with a bandstand for a 3 p.m. show featuring several Hispanic-American entertainers.

At 1 p.m., before the show starts, children up to age 12 will be invited to break pinatas and to compete for prizes.

The one-hour show includes Los Angeles singer Gloria Rivero, billed as "La Grandota de Durango," the Folklorico Coronado dance troupe, led by former Ballet of Folklorico headliner Estevan Coronado, and night club singer "El Charo Azteca."

Other acts include the female duo "Las Jilguerillas," and the Argentine musical and dance group, "Los Gauchos."

Drawings for the trips to Mexico, D.F. will be held after the show.

Locations for the "Mariachi America's" performances are:

Monday: Penney's, Sears, K&S Instruments, Tom's Cafe, Fourth Street at Pine Avenue.

Tuesday: Walkers', Buf-fum's, Home Savings, Flowers by Vicki.

Wednesday: Wool-worth's, Unique and Obsole-te, Jenulne Junque 'n' Jungle, U.S. Post Office, Retired Teachers' building.

Thursday: Florsheim, Lawson's, Craft Jewelers, Sav-On Drug, Motherhood Maternity.

Friday: Payless, Lern-er's, Jones' Restaurant, Gene's, Sears, Peppermint Pushcart Florists.

Saturday: Independent, Press-Telegram, Denny's, Imperial Hardware, Sav-On Drugs.

Old Ranch Townhome previews in Seal Beach

Exteriors dramatic

Furnished model homes are now open daily at the exclusive new Old Ranch Townhomes community in Seal Beach where preview showings are under way.

The development of 60 elegant townhomes by Bixby Ranch Co. is located off Lampson Avenue north of the San Diego Freeway and is bordered by the private Old Ranch Country Club and Old Ranch Tennis Club.

Pre-opening prices range from $77,990 to $83,990 for the spacious residences with from 1,824 to 2,200 square feet of living area.

BUYERS ARE offered a choice of innovative, split-level floor plans designed by Richardson Nagy Martin and featuring two or three bedrooms, two and three baths, study or library, formal dining room and private patio.

The townhomes all have luxurious master suites with private bath, dressing room and walk-in closet, entries of quarry tile, Padre brick fireplaces, wet bars and lavish baths with cultured marble pullmans and make-up vanities.

More custom-quality appointments are vaulted ceilings, wet bars, custom-designed double doors, carpeting throughout, central heating system and air conditioning and automatic garage door openers.

Deluxe kitchens feature "balanced-power" built-in appliances, pantry, breakfast nook, pass-thru window to a patio serving counter and hardwood cabinets. Sound-attenuating construction is used in all walls, ceilings and floors.

DRAMATIC exterior stylings of the Old Ranch Townhomes are in earth-toned stucco with masonry accents, rough-sawn wood siding and tile roofs. The residences are surrounded by abundant landscaping that includes a wide variety of specimen trees.

Within the community's garden setting are heated swimming and therapy pools and a private recreation building with furnished lounge, fireplace and wet bar.

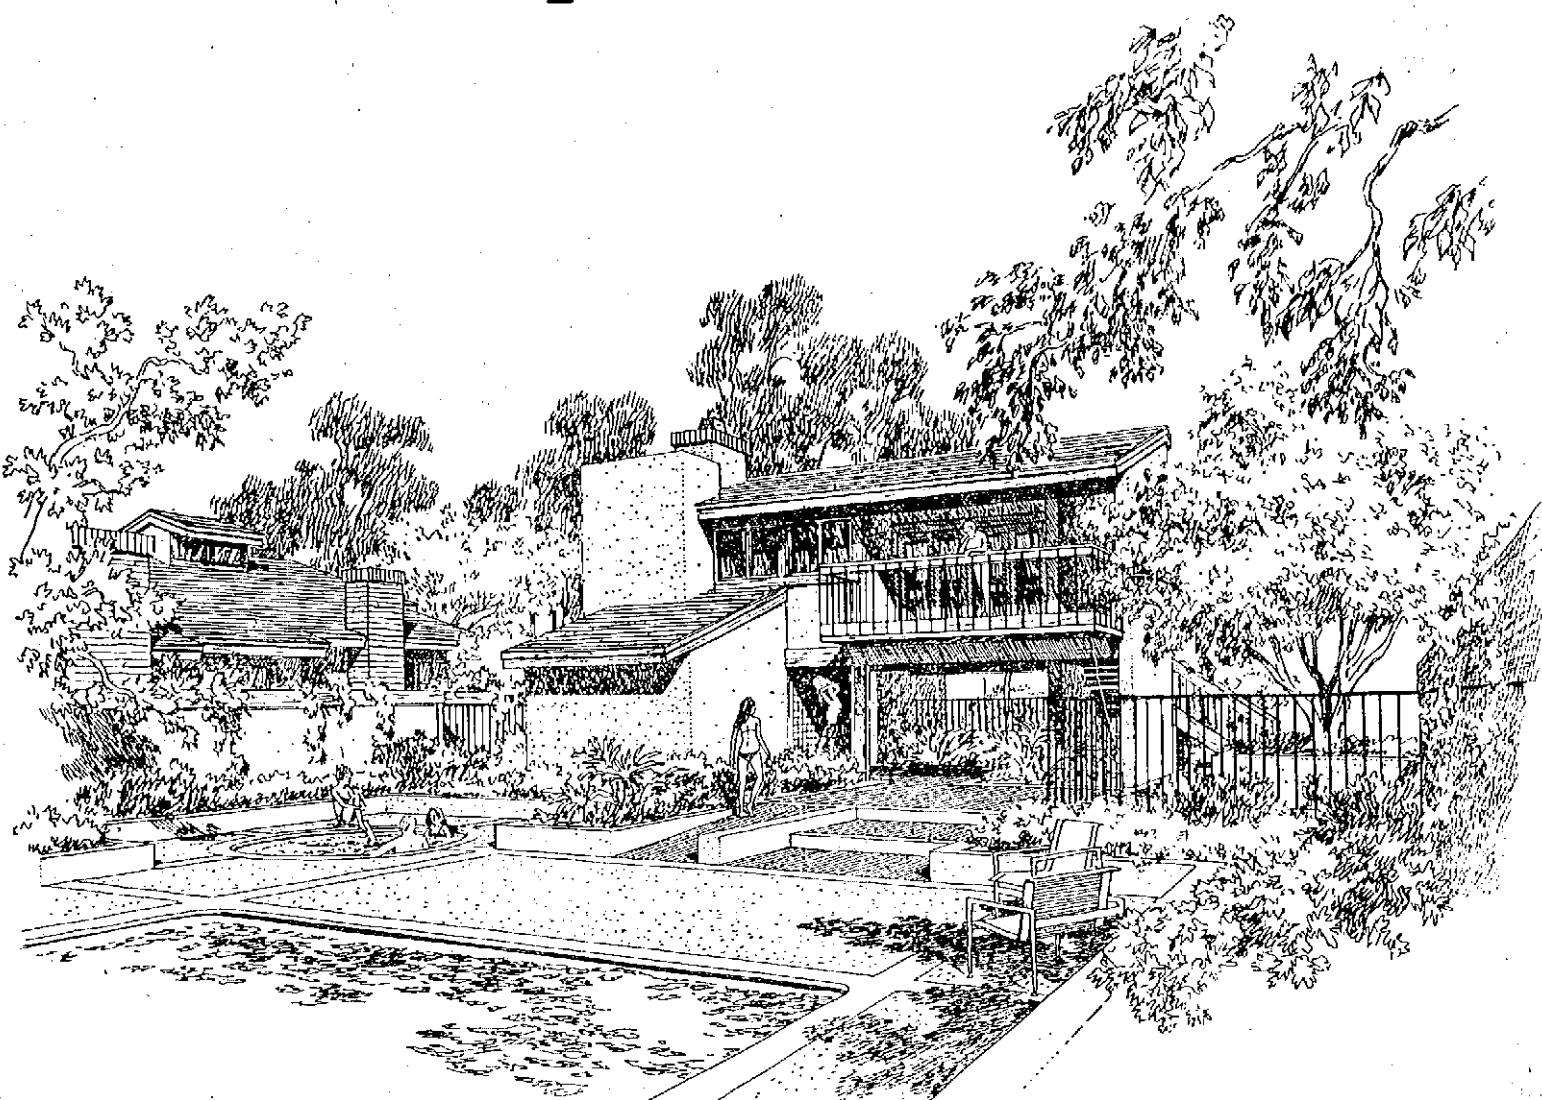

The extensive greenbelt areas, facilities and exteriors of the homes are professionally maintained through the homeowners association.

The prestigious neighborhood is located on the last of the undeveloped portions of Rancho Los Alamitos and offers close-in convenience to the Long Beach and greater Los Angeles areas and is near four major freeways, shopping and recreation.

THE OLD RANCH Townhomes sales office and model complex is located at 333 Old Ranch Road with representatives of Charles P. Day Realty, Inc., exclusive sales agent, on the premises.

The development may be easily reached by taking the San Diego Freeway to Seal Beach Boulevard, then north to Lampson Avenue and right (east) on Lampson to Old Ranch Townhomes in Seal Beach.

Added sophistication to 'Landing' homes

A secluded place outfitted with a roaring fire and mellow wood accents that's perfect for after-dinner brandy and rich conversation is out of the reach of most new home buyers — because such rooms rarely exist outside of expensive, custom-built homes.

They do, however, at The Landing.

"We designed The Landing for the sophisticated home buyer who appreciates attention to detail," said Frank W. Carr, executive vice president of Kendall Development Co., Inc., builder of the Huntington Beach neighborhood.

"EVERY ROOM has a feature that excites the discriminating home buyer: master baths feature step-up 'Roman-style' tubs, built-in planters, skylights, and double lavatories. Three of the four homes offered include conversation areas with fireplaces. One plan features a dramatic spiral staircase," said the company representative.

Three two-story and one single-level home are offered at The Landing, ranging in size from 1,701 to 2,633 square feet. Home buyers may choose three- or four-bedroom plans with two to three full baths.

Large, stylish kitchens were designed by Newport Collaborative of Newport Beach with emphasis on easy care. Kitchens feature large pantries, spacious work areas and such time-saving appliances as O'Keefe & Merritt three-cycle dishwashers, waste disposers and trash compactors.

HOME BUYERS are given a choice of gas or electric O'Keefe & Merritt ranges and ovens. Gas ranges feature conventional burner cooking surfaces and two continuous cleaning ovens. Electric units feature smooth-top or conventional-burner ranges, one self-cleaning oven, plus a second oven.

A choice of Dupont Corian or Franciscan Terra Grande ceramic tile countertops with laminated wood-grain edge is also offered in the kitchen.

Each home at The Landing includes nylon shag carpeting in most rooms, hardwood front doors equipped with deadbolt security, commercial-grade tile in the entry, and Armstrong custom Excelon tile in heavy-traffic areas.

Exterior amenities include rear lot-line fencing, concrete driveways and walkways, energy-saving insulation, cedar shake or shingle roofs, and underground utilities.

HOOK-UPS for washer and dryer are provided in the indoor laundry area or in the garage.

Strategically located within easy reach of the San Diego Freeway in Huntington Beach, less than two miles from Bolsa Chica State Beach, The Landing is freeway-close to commercial centers in Los Angeles and Orange Counties.

Shopping is also nearby at Huntington Center and at Westminster Mall via the San Diego Freeway. Furnished models, decorated by Blake Design of Los Angeles, are open daily from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m. and evenings by appointment.

To reach the community, take the San Diego Freeway to the Beach Boulevard exit. Drive south on Beach, turn right onto Warner Avenue. Turn left onto Springdale Street and proceed to the entrance of The Landing.

Country Club Gardens sales soar

Country Club Gardens, a private neighborhood of 72 split-level townhomes in the prestigious Virginia Country Club residential area of Long Beach, is reported one-third sold out during the first four weeks of sales.

The exclusive adult community is situated amid lush green gardens and almost all of the homes look out on some of the development's many water amenities.

Streams, bridges, seven waterfalls and a small reflection lake highlight the unique landscaping of the development's extensive greenbelt areas.

PRICES at Country Club Gardens range from $47,950 to $65,950 with excellent financing at 8 per cent interest (8 1/4 per cent annual percentage rate). The homes also qualify for the 5 per cent tax credit. All of the townhomes are under construction now with occupancy scheduled for October.

The luxury townhomes are available in three innovative floor plans with from 1160 to 1600 square feet of living area. The homes offer two generous bedrooms and loft-den or three bedrooms, all with two lavish baths.

Each plan has a trellised entry, private garden patio and over-sized two-car garage with shop area, laundry area and automatic door opener. Rustic-contemporary exteriors, designed in keeping with the area's fine homes, feature custom architectural detailing and roofs of cedar shake.

ELEGANT appointments of the townhomes include atrium-balconies, formal dining rooms, dramatic large living rooms with designer wood-burning fireplaces, wood parquet entry foyers and cathedral ceilings.

There are spacious master suites and convenience-planned kitchens with deluxe Tappan appliances, pantry and luminous ceiling. Ceramic tiling and wall-to-wall carpeting are also luxury features.

Country Club Gardens features a private swimming pool, jacuzzi and night-lighted paddle tennis courts for the exclusive use of residents, fully maintained by the homeowners association along with the grounds and exteriors of the homes.

RECREATION of all kinds is convenient to the development, including the deluxe facilities of neighboring Virginia Country Club, the Los Cerritos Park and Tennis Courts, Lakewood Country Club and Tennis Club and world-famous beaches and marinas.

Also in the vicinity are a variety of shopping and community services, the Long Beach Airport and the San Diego and Long Beach Freeways for easy commuting to major employment and metropolitan centers.

The Country Club Gardens sales office and furnished models are open daily from 10 a.m. at 3655 Country Club Drive and Cedar Avenue. The development may be easily reached by taking the San Diego Freeway to the Long Beach Boulevard exit.

Drive north on Long Beach Blvd. to 36th Street, then west on 36th (which becomes Country Club Drive) for one-quarter mile to Cedar Avenue and Country Club Gardens in Long Beach.

Chateau ends rebate today

The $2,000 rebate/allowance program will end officially at midnight tonight at the Rossmore Chateau in Seal Beach. The program, in effect for the past few weeks has drawn enthusiastic response from Long Beach home-seekers and has resulted in more than 15 purchases at the condominium site.

"Three more sales were recorded over the past weekend", joint venture partner Bernie Solomon said, "bringing our total to date to 50."

"RESPONSE to the rebate program has been excellent", he added. The rebate may be used in a number of areas such as upgrading interior items, or may be used to offset closing cost requirements. Interested persons are advised to act today due to the Sunday deadline. Details are available by calling, or visiting the sales center in Seal Beach.

Prices range from $46,450 to $59,950 and viewers are reminded that the $46,450 price purchased a spacious, full size two bedroom, two bath luxury unit. A "guaranteed sale program" has helped area homeowners sell their homes and thereby allow them to purchase in the Chateau.

Furnished models are open from 10 a.m. 'till dark and are on display at 12400 Montecito Road, adjacent to the Rossmore Business and Shopping Plaza. Immediate occupancy is offered.

The development is located five minutes from the Old Ranch Golf and Old Ranch Tennis Club.

RECREATION includes a heated swimming pool, sauna, therapeutic whirlpool, a fully equipped gymnasium and outdoor barbecues.

A security system of lobby TV scanners has attracted particular attention at the Rossmore Chateau.

For a monthly fee of approximately $49.50 exterior maintenance, landscaping, and care of the complete recreational facilities is performed by a professional firm retained by the homeowners association.

Interior appointments include a selection of nylon carpeting, central air conditioning with individual thermostats, and luminous kitchen ceilings. Kitchens are all-electric and feature range, oven, disposal, dishwasher, cast iron terraced sinks and copper plumbing.

All units feature "Quiet Control" insulation in floors, ceilings and all walls. A complete combination washer-dryer is included within each unit.

"INTEREST RATES, as low as 8 1/2 per cent, our excellent location, a 10 per cent down plan, this rebate program and quality product are the reasons cited by most viewers as their reasons for buying," Solomon said.

To reach the Rossmore Chateau from the San Diego Freeway, take the Los Alamitos Boulevard (Seal Beach Blvd) exit north to Saint Cloud Drive. Then left to the furnished models at Saint Cloud and Montecito Road.

For information, call (213) 430-8832 — evenings (213) 596-7119.

At Riviera Huntington

Seven homes remain

Only seven homes remain available during the close out of Riviera Huntington Townhomes in Huntington Beach.

Sales manager Virg Foland said the advantage of buying now was "terrific," as the next units will run about $10,000 more. RH's prices today begin at $35,500.

The sales office and model complex are at 16771 Bolsa Chica Ave., near Pearce Avenue. Take the Bolsa Chica exit south off the San Diego Freeway. Hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily.

Homes qualify for the $2,000 Income Tax Rebate and have two floor plans available— a three bedroom, two bath and two bedroom, 2 1/2 bath with den.

Community house raising coming back

RIDDER NEWS SERVICE

WHITEHALL, Wis. — The old-fashioned house raising, where neighbors get together and put up a new home, did not die with the old frontier.

It's an idea that is fresh — again.

Eighty families in this area have done just that since August, 1972.

Self-help housing is a program designed to build modest but adequate homes for people with adjusted annual incomes less than $8,500.

Under supervision of an experienced carpenter, six to 10 families join forces to build homes for each other.

Ervin Harnisch directs Trempealeau County Homes, Inc. here, which is a non-profit organization assisted by the Farmers Home Administration.

"OUR FUNCTION is to help families find each other, provide the construction supervisor and help each group buy supplies and find subcontractors, for concrete, electrical and plumbing work," he said.

Families do most of the carpentry work and the supervisor shows them how to do the work and makes sure the houses meet the building codes.

"More than half the work is done by the women as they usually have more free time. Often they make better carpenters than the men. At least the women admit they don't know how to do something and are willing to learn," Harnisch said.

"Some women have gone to work for local contractors after their homes were finished," he added.

Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Stoner, Galesville, moved into their home 2½ months ago and are still putting in the yard, garden and adding finishing touches to the house.

"It's a lot of work, but we'd do it again," Mrs. Stoner said. "There was no way we could have afforded a contractor-built house for several years."

"EACH FAMILY gets its own home loan from FHA and as with any loan it must be paid back in full," Harnisch said. "Interest rates vary, depending on the income level of the participants. However, each family's income is re-evaluated every two years and as its income increases so does the interest rate until it reaches the rate of regular FHA loans."

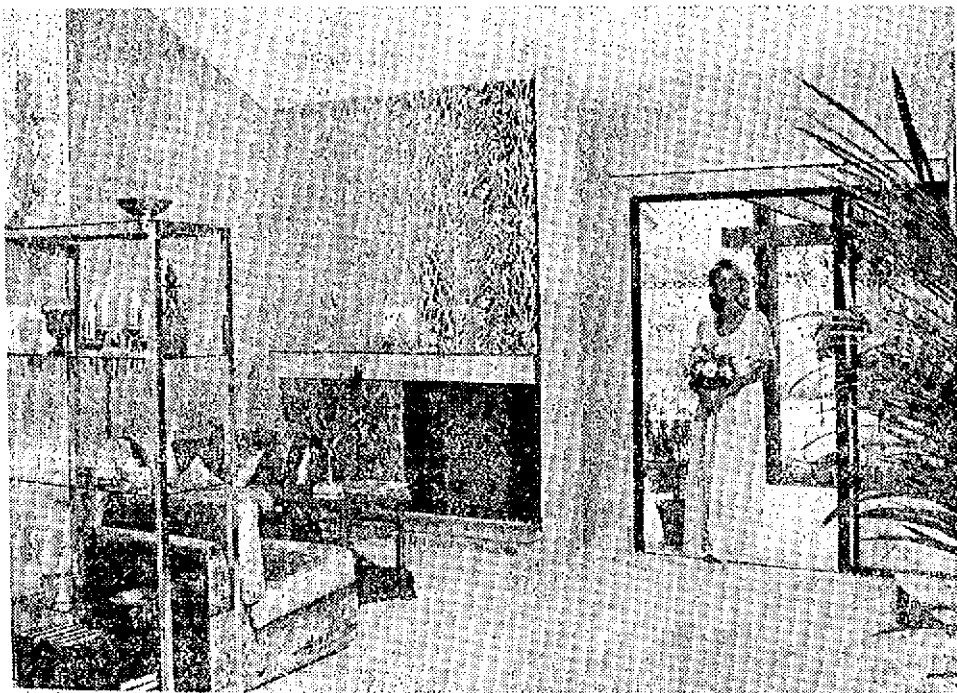

"Only families can qualify, but the head of the household may be a widow, widower or divorced. We've had four or five women with children build homes. And we've had a couple of single, but engaged, young men put up homes with the help of their fiancées."

Self-help homes are modest ranch style houses. Most have three bedrooms, but a few four-bedroom houses have been built for larger families. Before the group starts, each participating family must agree on the same floor plan. However, each family chooses its own site, style of windows and doors, roof line, vertical or horizontal siding and paint color.

COMPLETED HOUSES are assessed at $28,500 and they are being built for less than $24,500.

Each family pledges to work 1,500 hours towards building the houses. But it has never taken that long and the average is about 1,200. Groups of six families are the minimum and we've found that to be the ideal size.

Each family must work on all the houses and not just on its own. An exception to this is when the houses are ready for staining and painting, then each family does its own. A family cannot move into its home until all the houses are finished. But we do all of them in stages so they are all ready about the same time," Harnisch said.

FIREPLACES, VAULTED CEILINGS ADD LUSTER

Name Woods, Brookview sales agent

The George J. Heltzer Co., builders and developers, has announced that W. (Pete) Callaway & Associates have been appointed sales agents for both The Woods and Brookview communities in Costa Mesa.

The Woods, a 40-unit adult condominium, is at 1111 South Coast Drive, near the San Diego Freeway and Fairview Road.

Brookview is a family end of 211 homes. The first phase is in the final construction stage.

Each unit will have its own recreation center and a large children's playground. It is at 630 Paulino Ave., Costa Mesa.

Both developments are within walking distance of the South Coast Plaza, Village and Town Center. Models are open daily from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Downey Heritage Village in 'hub'

The location of the new Heritage Village Townhome community in Downey is termed the "action hub of Southern California" by developer, D & H Construction Co., Inc., of the same city.

On Stewart and Gray Road, about a mile west of Paramount Boulevard and south of Firestone Boulevard, the location is within a five minute drive of the Long Beach Freeway and several large shopping facilities. Employment centers of Los Angeles, Long Beach and Lakewood are within a 25 minute drive of Heritage Village and the homes themselves are adjacent to the Los Amigos Golf Club.

The one-and-two-story, two-and three-bedroom townhomes are surrounded by greenbelt areas, for well over half the available land is devoted to landscaped areas, recreational facilities and guest parking.

PRICED FROM $38,950, the homes include an impressive list of value-adding features: Central air conditioning, carpeting throughout, fireplaces, vaulted ceilings, kitchens with all built-ins, two car attached garages with direct access to each home for safety and privacy.

Recreational features for the use of owners and guests are a heated pool, jacuzzi, community clubhouse, putting green and covered shuffleboard courts.

D & H has two other similar developments, both in Orange County. Heritage Village in Anaheim is less than two miles directly west of Disneyland on Nutwood Street, two blocks north of Katella Avenue (Katella Avenue is the south entrance to the amusement park and is Willow Street in Long Beach). The homes there are priced from $34,950.

HERITAGE VILLAGE in La Habra has just opened and is still in the grand opening stage. As the other two communities it, too, is in an excellent residential area of that city. It is one mile north of Imperial Highway on Beach Boulevard (Highway 39). The homes are priced from $38,450.

Floor plans are different at each project. Model homes at all three Heritage Villages are open daily from 11 a.m. to dusk.

Design for Living

Creating privacy with depth

BY EMILY MALINO

Have you ever thought how furniture design over the centuries reflected the functional needs of the users? Many examples spring to mind. From the earliest traces of furniture in the tomb of Tutankhamen, for example, furniture was included in the burial place, presumably for use by the Pharaoh after life.

Several X-leg chairs have been found there, the X-leg being the simplest and most functional way to support a seat until later cabinetmakers learned about cross-bracing or stretchers for straight legs. Several low stools were also in the tombs, matching the chairs, a kind of ancient ottoman for the royal feet, absolutely essential because the chairs were made so high that even a tall Pharaoh's feet would have dangled otherwise.

WELL-PROPORTIONED room is seen facing the center of this spacious living room. A shelter sofa and ottoman create the illusion of privacy and depth. Track lighting gives balance to the large floor pieces.

(United Feature Syndicate, Inc.)

group without getting in the way of the furniture or those seated.

IN THIS high-ceilinged room, with its happy combination of old and new architectural details, the shelter sofa looks perfectly natural and handsome in its plain rustic cover, and functions exactly as its forebears were supposed to in giving privacy and protection from front-door drafts to the people who use it.

In a more contemporary, anonymous room with lower ceilings, a much lighter upholstery color would keep the sofa from dominating the room.

A nice spin-off, which I've used, is to cover the ottoman in the still-unworn part of an old Oriental rug — giving a kind of rich center to the room, and a perfect place for feet and the occasional dog or cat.

Job titles 'revised'

In an effort to banish sexism and maintain neutrality, the Labor Department's book of job titles is being revised. A salesman is listed as a salesperson and a stewardess, a flight attendant.

The construction industry, which has a reputation as a bastion of male chauvinism apparently isn't when it comes to job titles. Other than foreman, which is being changed to supervisor, most other job titles in construction such as carpenter, bricklayer and plumber already are neutral.

I USED a shelter sofa in an old house where the front door opened directly onto the living room and where the owner's previous arrangement — the sofa was facing the door on the opposite long wall — gave no feeling of privacy whatever. Instead, I placed the new sofa at right angles to the fireplace, with its own ottoman and chairs grouped around it for socializing, and used the opposite long wall as a picture gallery for a collection of handsome drawings in simple chrome frames.

The fireplace wall became the social focus of the room. A thick shag rug defined the sitting area. With the sofa and ottoman, which is upholstered in a deep rust corduroy, is a pair of handsome bamboo-framed arm chairs that are different enough in style and shape to balance the heavy sofa, and a glass and chrome occasional table.

Because floor or table lamps look out of scale with these high-back and high-arm pieces, I used track lighting on the ceiling to illuminate the walls and floor and a high arc of a floor lamp to illuminate the center of the social

Savings pouring to S & Ls

Business Wire
SAN FRANCISCO — Net savings inflows into savings and loan associations in Arizona, California and Nevada apparently reached a new high for July, said the Federal Home Loan Bank of San Francisco.

Net inflows into 11th district S & Ls were estimated to range between $580 million and $680 million. The previous July record was $459 million set in 1972.

The bank's estimate is based on a weekly report of savings flows by a sample of the largest savings and loan associations in the district.

The estimate also takes into account other available information.

At Mission Viejo

Madrid de Espana opens

Unit 30 of Mission Viejo's popular Madrid de Espana series is open today with 55 homes going on sale in Mission Viejo, the 11,000-acre planned community in southern Orange County.

"Just one month ago, 26 homes were sold in a half hour when Unit 29 opened," said Grant Sullivan, general sales manager for Mission Viejo Co. "The demand for these spacious and gracious homes continues to be very strong."

"These homes have a living-in-the-country feeling that is part of the Mission Viejo way of life," added Sullivan. "They are approached by crossing the bridge entry to the rolling hills above Wilderness Glen Natural Area, and are set in the English Canyon section of the community."

floorplans range up to 2,920 square feet, with from three to five bedrooms, family rooms and multi-car garages. A selection of floorplans — including outside balconies off the master suites and wall-removing options creating extra-spacious recreation or hobby rooms — provide versatility.

DISTINCTIVE architectural features include step-down entries, beamed cathedral ceilings in some rooms, raised living areas and wood-burning fireplaces. Two plans feature garden-view U-shaped kitchens, which extend into the backyard.

Kitchens include electric ranges, continuous-cleaning ovens, dishwashers, disposals, pantries, ceramic tile counters, stained hardwood cabinets, and luminous ceilings. The spacious master suites contain such features as separate dressing areas.

Prices are expected to range from $52,995 to $76,245.

Open daily from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m., the Madrid de Espana model complex may be reached by taking the La Paz Road off-ramp from the Santa Ana-San Diego Freeway, turning left on La Paz to Marguerite Parkway, left again on Marguerite.

Uncommon complaint

LONDON — Maureen Colquhoun and five other MPs have signed a motion urging establishment of regular office hours for House of Commons sessions.

Mrs. Colquhoun, a Labor member, said she wants to get home in time to cook her husband's dinner.

Ground breaking for Alicia Park

Bob Osborne, vice president of Arnel Development announces that the groundbreaking is under way in Laguna Hills for Alicia Park Homes, Arnel's new residential community of 80 single-family luxury homes.

Four different floorplans will be available containing 1100 to 1600 square feet, situated on lots ranging from 6,000 to 7,000 square feet. Homebuyers are urged to make early reservations prior to the grand opening as a salesman is on the site daily to aid in the selection of sites and floorplans.

Priced from $44,900 to $52,900, the one and two story residences are the best value available in the fast-growing Laguna Hills area, a prime family and recreation oriented region in Orange County.

Located one-quarter mile from the San Diego Freeway on Paseo de Valencia, Alicia Park is only a short distance from the shopping facilities of the Laguna Hills Mall where major department stores, specialty shops, theatres, restaurants and all professional services are concentrated in the new commercial center located off El Toro Road.

Interiors of the homes will include a long list of luxury features found only in much more expensive custom homes. The new neighborhood is located across from a park and elementary school. Challenging golf courses, located throughout the rolling ranch country and ocean beaches are only a short drive away.

ed throughout the rolling ranch country and ocean beaches are only a short drive away.

Arnel Development Co., the developer, is also completing Alicia Park Village, an executive apartment project also located in Laguna Hills. The firm and its executive staff has been responsible for the construction of more than 10,000 homes and apartments during more than 10 years of activity in residential building in Southern California.

Sales office trailer is open from 10 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. and can be reached by taking the San Diego Freeway to Alicia Parkway and turning right to Paseo de Valencia.

Homes 'fit' to site overlooking ocean

Finishing touches are being applied to the 10-home, first phase of Park Avenue Estates, located high in the lovely hills overlooking Laguna Beach and the ocean.

Offering an incomparable and unobstructed view of the Pacific, these luxury homes are uniquely blended to the slope of the hillside terrain preserving natural beauty and contours, according to David Miller, president of David G. Miller and Associates, the building company.

"We have blended the home to the site," Miller said, "as opposed to stilt or slab construction. Utilizing a more complicated, expensive and time-consuming approach to the placing and building of these fine homes, we are now able to offer luxurious, custom-like homes to the discerning and demanding homebuyer of today."

CHOICING MILLER was Laurence Campbell, former member of the Laguna Beach Planning Commission.

The execution of this project far exceeds the fondest expectations of the Planning Commission when we approved Park Avenue Estates. It is esthetically pleasing to see how these beautiful homes fit into the lovely high hills of Laguna.

Priced from $109,995, these three- and four-bedroom homes range from 2,364 to 3,091 square feet plus garage. All have 2½ baths and den with several offering studios, bonus rooms and lofts. Large view decks beyond sliding glass doors enhance the view potential of every home.

OTHER FEATURES include custom designed entry door; quarry tiled entrance, quarry tiled wood burning fireplace, cedar shingle roof, automatic garage door opener, underground utilities including cable TV, family room with eating bar connecting to kitchen, a Gaffers and Sattler balanced power kitchen featuring brushed chrome range with griddle, self-cleaning oven and dishwasher in brushed chrome finish.

Also included is 10 per cent nylon pile Century "Persuasion" Carpeting throughout, a separate dining room, food pantry, Franciscan Terra-Grande ceramic tiled kitchen counter tops, cultured marble bathroom pullman tops, raised panel hardwood cabinets, two walk-in closets in master suite, wet bar with stainless steel sink and a 50-gallon gas water heater.

SALES AGENT for this $1,175,000 first phase of Park Avenue Estates is Good Real Estate of Orange County, Inc., Laguna Beach. Owner-Manager Marshall Stiltner said, "We have been offering these fine homes on a preview basis and have logged three sales to date. The high interest of the potential homebuyers visiting these homes of such obvious basic value and appeal indicates to us that the remaining seven homes will soon be sold. Plans are now well under way for construction of the 19 homes in Phase 2."

The demanding task of land planning and engineering as well as the design of the homes to fit the natural contours and shapes of the land was admirably handled by the architectural firm of Archi-Tekton of Newport Beach. A team composed of William C. Clapet, Fleetwood B. Joiner and Ed Kaneshiro worked together to create homes that belong to the site and vice-versa, according to Clapet.

"WE HAD TO take much care, thought and consideration to be sure that the hillside was not mis-used and the homes were not forced upon the site nor the site forced upon the home," Clapet said, "and we worked to preserve the inherent beauty that nature provided."

A grading technique developed by Joiner allowed development with a minimum disturbing to existing land contours and minimal earth moving for building sites.

Now ready for occupancy, Park Avenue Estates can be reached by taking Pacific Coast Highway to Legion Street, just one block south of the Hotel Laguna. Turn inland to Park Avenue, turn right and follow the street to the site, across from Thurston Intermediate School.

High up

These Park Avenue Estate Homes are blended uniquely into the slope of a hillside overlooking the Pacific at Laguna Beach. The homes "really fit into Laguna's scenic hills," David Miller, president of David G. Miller and Associates, builders, said. Prices start at $109,995. Miller added that all units have large view decks "to enhance the view even more."

Good insulation lowers utilities

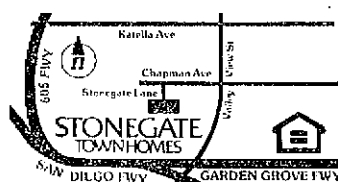

The purpose of home insulation is to reduce heat loss and heat gain. In winter, heat travels from the inside to the outside; in summer, from the outside to the inside.

Quality insulation such as cellulose fiber, properly installed, notes the National Cellulose Insulation Manufacturers Association, will reduce heating and cooling costs substantially, yet maintain comfort levels.

A PROJECT OF ATLANTIC PACIFIC CONSTRUCTION

The Newest Tennis Club on the Palos Verdes Peninsula— Membership Fee $60,450

The initiation fee might sound a little steep. But consider that the $60,450 also includes a spacious condominium packed with luxuries, a spectacular ocean view, full security, special sound proofing, and loads of other recreational amenities.

This new "club" is The Ocean Terrace, set down on a bluff above the rolling sea. 100 condominiums, each with an ocean view. But the big news is that the Ocean Terrace has all the facilities to be considered a tennis club.

For starters, there are two lighted regulation tennis courts and two lighted paddle tennis courts. Most tennis clubs average one court for every 25 memberships sold. The Ocean Terrace hits that figure on the button.

But, you might say a tennis club always has more facilities than just courts. The Ocean Terrace fits that bill too. For starters, there's a large clubhouse, with a fully equipped gymnasium, two saunas, billiard room, card party room, kitchen, and lounge with fireplace. Then, there's the large swimming pool and separate hydrotherapy pool. Items you wouldn't normally find at a tennis club—but at The Ocean Terrace—are shuffleboard courts, a putting green, and an outdoor activity area.

Plus, there's that extra added attraction. A two- or three-bedroom home filled with several small luxuries. Walk-in closets your whole family could walk into; gas equipped wood-burning fireplaces; individual lockable storage rooms in the semi-subterranean garages; and a couple more dozen things we might tell you about, but maybe it's enough to say we built them like we were going to live in them ourselves.

"Memberships" at The Ocean Terrace are going fast. The supply is limited. You're invited to take a look at the "club's" facilities—and the furnished models as well. They're open daily from 10 a.m. till dusk. The Ocean Terrace is on the coast at Paseo del Mar and Palos Verdes Drive South, just 3½ miles east of Marineland and only 9 minutes from the Harbor Fwy. For more information, phone 541-2588.

What's Your Problem?

Property lines can turn neighbors into enemies

By DON CAMPBELL

Like the common head-cold, bad neighbors are always with us and the cure is just as elusive.

"Good fences make good neighbors," is a lot more than just a cynically glib commentary on the situation. In all too many cases, unfortunately, a very substantial fence is the only way in the world to make a neighbor tolerable, much less "good."

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL:

Who owns a property line? One party claims ownership of it — that the line is his, and he says that every inch of it is his. Then where is my line? I must also have a marker, and he has planted trees and bushes on the line. At one point his "line" is 70 square feet over the actual line.

Am I to be satisfied with this encroachment? He is squeezing more and more from me as the years go along — he displays his trees and threatens me if I dare touch a branch. I think this is rudely unfair. I, too, own my property. Don't I have any rights in the matter? — Mr. B.W.D. (Allentown, Pa.)

ANSWER: A line is a line is a line, and everything on your side of it is this — assuming that there are no easements noted in the legal descriptions of the property.

I'm a little thunder-struck by your patience in this matter. Is he going to have to plant a row of tomatoes across the end of your living room before you get up on your rear legs and slap him down? This is absolute nonsense.

There are two ways to handle this arrogant boor, and both will require the services of a lawyer (but it shouldn't be all that expensive). The more direct way is to have the lawyer write this neighbor a letter spelling out for him what a property line is all about and giving him a reasonable time to remove all plants, trees and other encroachments that are clearly on YOUR side of the property line.

A more satisfying way of doing it, perhaps, would be to have the property surveyed and staked (just to make sure that you are being legal about this) and then uproot everything that belongs to him which is on your side or, better yet, just tag it as your property.

Of course, he'll be nasty about it — that's the nature of the man, and that's why you'll need the lawyer to back you up. Remember, now, that you can't touch any tree trunks or branches that are clearly on his side of the line, but you certainly CAN lop off anything overhanging YOUR side of the line.

I don't know how long this out has been at this little game, but you've got to stop him dead before it goes any farther. One of these days you're going to drive home from work and find that he's turned your own driveway into a toll-drive complete with a booth and a collector. Shame on you for letting him go this far!

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL:

I am 61 years old and would like to take early retirement due to my wife's illness so that we can enjoy some time together and do some traveling. We own our house on which we have no mortgage, but we have just purchased a mobile home — not a trailer, but a self-contained, motorized home — on which we owe about $7,000. We have some savings bonds and a few stocks which we don't want to cash in to pay for the motorized home.

Do you advise getting a mortgage on the house to pay off the motorized home so my payments wouldn't be so high? The interest on the mortgage would be deductible. Living with inflation, I believe that keeping my bonds and stocks would be advantageous to us. Am I right? — Mr. J.S.P. (Easton, Pa.)

ANSWER: I am absolutely convinced that you're right. Hang onto the stocks and bonds both for income and as a hedge against inflation and take out a mortgage on the home to pay off the motorized unit.

It's true that the interest you are paying on the motorized home payments is every bit as deductible as the interest will be on your new mortgage, but there's very little comparison between the interest rate that you're paying on the mobile loan (what is it — 18 per cent?) and the interest rate you would have on a new mortgage — possibly 9 or 9-1/4 per cent. All logic tells us that the way you are inclined to go is exactly the way you SHOULD go.

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL:

My husband and I are both retired and are in comfortable circumstances, and we would like to help out our only son (he's 24), his wife and year-old baby.

We have a house that we lived in for many years and which we own free and clear. Now that we're retired, though, we plan on moving to a state with a better climate and buying a condominium where we won't have to work so hard.

Our idea is to sell our house to our son, but a friend tells us that we can't do this because our son is just getting started in business, doesn't have a very big income and wouldn't "qualify."

We don't want to get into any trouble with the authorities, but on the other hand we aren't sure that this friend knows too much about the law. What do you think? — Mrs. W.E.V. (Buffalo, N.Y.)

ANSWER: I think

you've got a friend who probably means well but doesn't know what he's talking about. It's your house and you can sell it to anyone you wish for any amount of money you wish — he doesn't have to "qualify" for anything except your love.

I would, however, put it on a businesslike basis just so that your son won't be tempted to fall into sloppy handling of his money. Set a price on the house that your son can realistically pay off, have a lawyer draw up the papers and then have the repayment schedule handled by a disinterested party — such as a title company.

Now, don't spoil him rotten and put a price of $500 on the house!

(Campbell welcomes your letters and comments, but can answer only representative questions of general interest. Write him in care of The I.P.T., Box 230, Long Beach, 90844.)

Day projects near sell out

Charles P. Day Realty, Inc. reports a near sellout at two San Clemente condominium projects within weeks of the grand openings and outstanding pre-sales at two other luxury residential developments represented by Day.

Sales of $2 million have been recorded at Reef Gate West, San Clemente's only on-the-beach condominium, and a total of $2.2 million is reported at Ocean Fairways located on the San Clement Golf Course in the ocean resort city.

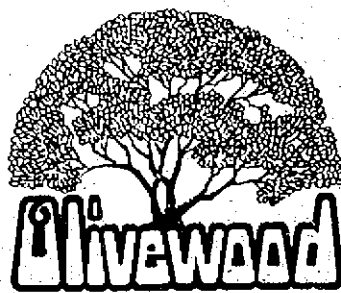

Pre-opening sales at the exclusive Old Ranch Townhomes development in Seal Beach have reached $935,000 and, in Carlsbad on the northern San Diego County coast, Day Realty has made $850,000 in residential sales at recently opened Cove Point off Bristol Cove.

Charles P. Day Realty, Inc. has also been the exclusive sales agent for Presidential Heights in San Clemente, reporting over $12 million in sales since its opening.

Charles P. Day, head of the Southern California-based real estate firm, also announces the acquisition of Huntington Grove Estates, a new adult townhome community in the exclusive San Marino area, and the one-of-a-kind ocean view homes of Park Avenue Estates in Laguna Beach.

REX L HODGES REALTY

USA'76

The Spirit of '76

We have it at . . . REX L. HODGES REALTY

Our company was founded in 1929. Today, 46 years later, our foundation is as solid as "the Rock of Gibraltar."

Buyers and sellers alike, from Downey to San Juan Capistrano know that a "Hodges Trade in," a "Hodges Equity Loan" or a "Hodges Guarantee" can put together a sale that otherwise might never have been made.

For more than four decades, Rex L. Hodges Realty has consistently been the leader. Year after year, Rex L. Hodges is the "Winners Choice." Sign your Declaration of Independence from rent receipts by planning to buy that home! Your best hedge against inflation is to own a piece of the great United States of America.

If you are thinking of selling your home, be sure that you take advantage of the many programs available to you under the Rex L. Hodges "Bill of Rights."

When you list your home with Rex L. Hodges Realty, "Consider it sold!"

LIFE/STYLE—L/S-1

Loan-starved L.A. cities redlined

Redlining — the practice of denying mortgage loans on the basis of racial or ethnic composition, income level or age of residents, or age of homes — was revealed to be widespread in 12 major Los Angeles County areas including Long Beach.

Patterns in discrimination were outlined in a report released in June by the Center for New Corporate Priorities (CNCP), a consumer organization which purports to be the first to document mortgage lending patterns throughout the county.

The Center, with money from donations and foundation grants, examined the distribution of 15,000 loans made by state chartered savings and loan associations for various types of housing from January through May 1974.

Loans for single family dwellings accounted for 75 per cent of the total of $671 million for homes averaging more than $40,000 in price.

This finding led researchers to the conclusion that Los Angeles is a wealthy county, but they saw, in the distribution of mortgage loans, "evidence of the contribution which lending institutions make toward poverty in Los Angeles."

The report was published with a map on which large portions of the county were colored red to denote neighborhoods and entire cities where "there is no prospect of lending at all, where more than one million people receive less than one per cent of mortgage dollars."

REDLINED ARE South Central Los Angeles and surrounding areas — East Los Angeles, Boyle Heights, Highland Park, and Echo Park. Large portions of Pasadena, Pacoima, Pomona, San Pedro, Venice, West Covina, Covina and Long Beach are also in red.

The report explains that a person in a redlined area cannot get a mortgage loan on his property regardless of its value or his financial qualifications. The redlined area has been termed "high risk" by lenders.

In Long Beach this area includes 12 census

Stories by James M. Leavy • Staff Writer

tracts south of Willow Street and west of Cherry Avenue which average 8 loans per tract. An entire area which lies between the harbor and Redondo Avenue received only 56 loans, eight of the them for single family dwellings.

Patterns of discrimination emerge when mortgage lending in the redlined area of Long Beach is compared with Palos Verdes which is a prime lending area.

More than $36 million in mortgage money was allocated by savings and loans in the wealthy peninsula area while the redlined area of Long Beach received only $693,100 and half of that went for two multiple unit mortgages.

There were nearly 50 single family home loans per tract in Palos Verdes and an average of only one-tenth of a loan in Long Beach. Peninsula residents averaged $454.98 per capita in single family dwelling loans. The average here was 27 cents per capita.

According to the 1970 census, the population of Palos Verdes was 63,588 and mostly white, middle and high income. Population of Long Beach's redlined area was 48,688, but an estimated 40 per cent of it was composed of members of minority groups.

Compton, with a population of 83,700, is also redlined. During the five-month period only 21 loans were made, 14 for single family dwellings. The area, with nearly 87 per cent of its population composed of minorities, attracted only $352,445 in mortgage money. That's $2.41 per capita.

THE LENDING PROFILE is similar in the Harbor area. Most of San Pedro along Gaffey Street to the ocean, Harbor City, and the harbor area above the East Basin and south of Wilmington is redlined. Slightly more than $500,000 was made available in 13 census tracts. Less than half of the money went for 9 single family dwellings. The report reveals that 53.3 per cent of the residents belong to minority groups.

The CNCP report sketches patterns of discrimination by comparing lending policies with numbers of

See PATTERNS OF, Page L/S-10

A BALANCE IN savings and loan association responsibilities for granting home loans is urged by Donald E. Burns, California's secretary of business and transportation.

...can we blame lenders?

Redlining exists. There's no doubt about that. But how it is done, why it is done and what, if anything, should be done to stop it is the subject of a controversy which centers pretty much on the role of lending institutions in society.

The term "redlining" is a dirty word on both ends of the economic spectrum.

If you are poor, aged, a member of a minority group, or if you just happen to live in an older part of town, "redlining" means you have been automatically eliminated as an applicant for a mortgage loan. It means your city or neighborhood is going down hill, loan-starved, while billions of dollars in bank and savings and loan association deposits are being funneled to wealthy areas.

On the other hand, if you are one of those persons who manages this money, who is responsible for protecting it and making a profit with it, "redlining" is a libel, a slander, a bad rap, or at best a highly inaccurate description of what you believe to be "sound business judgment." You see attempts to change your basis for making these judgments as attempts to put the nation's financial institutions in chains — to tell them where, how, and to whom to make loans, and, worst of all, to force them in the name of social responsibility to make bad loans.

THESE ARE SOME of the elements in a complex argument which will be heard Monday by members of the California Assembly Finance, Insurance and Commerce committee when it considers Senate Bill 1048.

The bill, introduced by Sen. Nate Holden, a Democrat representing Los Angeles' 30th district, would require savings and loan associations to prepare statements of geographic investment patterns to be made available for public inspection. Lenders would also be required to respond in writing to loan applicants and to make full disclosure of approvals and rejections.

The basic thrust of the measure is to let the public, particularly depositors, know what the institutions are doing on the assumption that if they do not approve they will respond by taking their business elsewhere.

Holden thinks the bill, which passed in the Senate by a vote of 25-0, would result in "an opportunity to save many older homes and provide some of the housing we will need in the future."

Although many of his constituents are black, Holden does not think redlining is solely the result of racial discrimination. "Most areas with poor housing turn out to be occupied by minorities. But then whites also live in redlined areas."

He levels a different kind of charge at lending institutions. He says it is his private opinion that savings and loan associations which were lending money freely in the 50s and 60s programmed redlining. They withheld loans from certain areas to force the federal government into subsidizing code enforcement programs. The government pumped money into deteriorating areas to the benefit of lending institutions. In short, vast areas of the county were financially starved out in order to attract federal funds.

THE EXTENT OF the starvation in Los Angeles

County was revealed graphically for the first time last June by the Center for New Corporate Priorities headed by Jim Lowery.

The center's report triggered consumer's rights action, and an application by Gibraltar Savings and Loan to open a branch in Sherman Oaks came under fire recently on the grounds that the lending institution wanted to expand in a prime lending area while it engaged in redlining elsewhere.

The Los Angeles Coalition Against Redlining and other consumer advocates challenged the application at a hearing before the state savings and loan commissioner.

Lowery cites more drastic consumer protest in Chicago where workers went from door-to-door asking depositors to shift their money from one institution to another. He says that by April $70 million had been taken out of institutions which engaged in redlining.

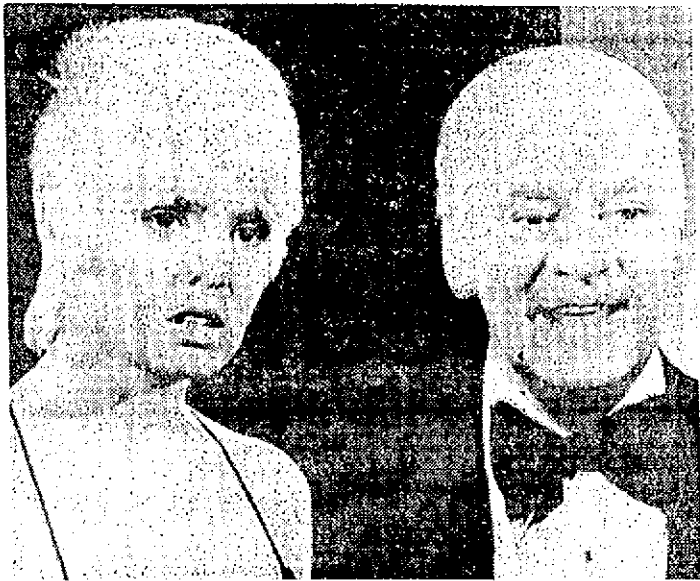

The effort provided "an opportunity for the community to monitor what branches were doing," Lowery says.

He thinks the same thing can be achieved here by enacting a law which forces disclosure and opens records of lending practices to the public.

He is calling for a degree of accountability by lenders. "We already have a regulatory system that protects savers. Their deposits are insured and a regulatory system sends bank examiners out to keep on top of the risk. When a bank fails, its depositors are protected by law...but we haven't dealt with the TENNIS star Arthur Ashe — time for military service and tour of duty at West Point.

DIRECTOR Alfred Hitchcock — no driving for this master of suspense!

Q: Has Richard M. Dixon, the actor who cashed in on his resemblance to Richard M. Nixon had to follow Nixon's example and retire? — Malcolm Marks, Miami.

A: No. Dixon is still acting. Currently he may be seen in a new porno flick titled (not so subtly) "The Presidential Peepers."

Q: Is Alfred Hitchcock, who's given us goose-bumps with his frightening films, personally afraid of anything? — Mrs. Fannie McLaughlin, Denver.

A: Yes. Hitch admits he's so afraid of getting a traffic ticket. He never learned to drive a car!

Q: My husband claims the Russian cosmonauts took lox aboard their spaceship. He's kidding, isn't he? — Ruth Gallagher, New City, N.Y.

A: No. He's right. But it's not the kind of lox you eat with bagels. In "space talk," LOX is short for Liquid Oxygen.

Q: What was the real reason Warren Beatty turned down a part in "The Godfather"? — Melinda Simpson, Oakland.

A: "I was offered a deal to produce and act in 'The Godfather.' And turned it down — with no regrets — even though I was certain it would be a sure hit and moneymaker," Beatty reveals without bitterness. "I'm only interested in doing original movie scripts like 'Shampoo,' making books, plays or musicals into movies, or in doing remakes of previous successful films."

Q: We loved that Joey and Dad summer series. Do you think we'll see more of the two Heathertons together? And didn't Dad, at one time, conduct a late-night talk show in a Broadway restaurant? — Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Dunstall, Brooklyn.

A: Yes. Heatherton hosted a nightly after-theater radio celebrity program for Gene Leone at Mama Leone's off Times Square. One midnight, he interviewed us on his show together with another guest, a breathtakingly beautiful doll he introduced as his then 15-year-old daughter, Joey. Though now a bank executive, Ray, after reading a flood of favorable fan letters, might just decide to take another fling in showbiz with a variety-talk-show format. Maybe with Joey.

Q: Is it true that Arthur Ashe once went to West Point? — Gail Blanchard, Cincinnati.

A: Yes. His service hasn't been confined to a tennis court. After winning a scholarship to UCLA, Ashe, during his two-year Army hitch, did enter West Point. Not as a cadet but as a systems analyst. Lt. Ashe was mustered out in 1969.

Q: Does anyone know what was Margaret Truman's reaction to seeing James Whitmore play Harry S. Truman in "Give 'Em Hell Harry"? — The Baileys, St. Louis.

A: "My God, it's my father," is Margaret's quote in a Variety ad for the play. Ironically, Paul Hume (who got hell from Harry when he criticized his daughter's singing) is quoted two lines beneath Margaret as saying: "We've needed someone like Harry Truman for a long time." (Too bad Harry isn't here to enjoy that comment.)

MARGARET Truman Daniel congratulates James Whitmore on his portrayal of her late father, Harry Truman — performance is believable to all who knew the former President.

ACTOR Warren Beatty — no regrets over turning down role in "The Godfather."

'Bluebird' limps rather than soars on detante

LENINGRAD, Russia — George Cukor, the grand old man of movies, conducts an interview the way a meticulous maitre d'hotel might prepare an exotic flaming dessert. Words are selected with care and wisdom; anecdotes are related like reels, familiar, tried and true.

That's on the good days. Today is a bad day. In fact, there have been nothing but bad days since December, when he arrived in Russia to make Maeterlinck's "The Bluebird," a spectacular movie that started out as a multimillion-dollar musical fairy tale made with Russian money and Hollywood know-how. The first Russian-American co-production, in fact, in the history of show business.

Hopes were high. The stars would be Elizabeth Taylor, Ava Gardner, Cicely Tyson, James Coco, Jane Fonda. They would all sing and dance with the sumptuous support of the Kirov Ballet. Edith Head would create costumes undreamed of in their splendor.

People started flying into Russia like an invasion from Mars. George Cukor, the man who created movie history with "Camille," "Gaslight," "A Star is born," "My Fair Lady" and others too fabulous to mention because the list would take three days, would be the genius who would hold it magically together.

Where did it all go wrong? "We came here because we thought we were doing another 'Wizard of Oz,'" groaned a weary Cicely Tyson. "This thing is a disaster. Nobody can hold it together."

The stars suffered from dysentery. Elizabeth Taylor flew to London to be hospitalized. The costumes had to be remade. The Russian cameraman had to be replaced because he had only worked in black and white and the rushes were so dark nobody could see the screen. Musical numbers have been dropped to save time and money. The Kirov had other commitments and backed out. James Coco dropped out to have a gall bladder operation.

Ava Gardner locked herself in her room with a vodka bottle. At one point the entire film was suspended and reassembled. Costs soared to $15 million and the damned thing still isn't finished.

THROUGH IT ALL, George Cukor, 76 and still dancing, has been the model of diplomacy. At least he's been eating well. During an interview, one of his assistants was cooking dinner on a hot plate while another washed dishes in his bathtub. Since practically everyone on "The Bluebird" has at one time or another been poisoned by the Russian food, Cukor has had everything sent in from Fortnum and Mason in London. "You've got to eat," he shrugs, trying to hide the mountain of problems caving in on his elderly head. Then he proceeds to do just that, giving at the same time the kind of interview that makes press agents dream of Cadillacs.

"I'm curious to learn just how an old-timer comes to such a remote place to try to make a musical that would be difficult even under the best Hollywood conditions."

"Who's an old-timer?"

"Well, a young-timer, then. You've always been surrounded by the very best technicians who freed you for the important work of dealing with the actors. Here, you are having to be your own lighting man, your own script coordinator, your own carpenter...."

"A lot of that is the Tower of Babel. I've been here in Russia since October, and most of the actors arrived in December. In that much time actors have a way of building up all sorts of phantoms in their heads. It's a different country and they don't speak the language. But I'm adapting nicely."

"What is wrong here is not the fault of the Russians. It's because we were not sufficiently organized to begin with. I only speak to the producer through my lawyers. Now we are all very spoiled in America. We have grown up with a successful tradition of 75 years of moviemaking that has touched the imagination of the world. They don't have the same skills here, but that's why we're here, to teach them."

"But how can they learn anything if we don't bring our best technical equipment? Aren't they providing everything?"

"Now you are asking embarrassing questions. I'm trying to get the newest cameras and the newest recording machinery and all of that kind of thing, but we have communication problems between here and Hollywood and so far we have had to make do with what the Russians can provide and that has caused numerous delays."

"But don't sell the Russians short. They have built sets that are enormously impressive and expensive. In the peasant kitchen scene they have inlaid tiles especially made and perfectly beautiful in every detail. Elizabeth Taylor wanted to take part of the set home with her. We could not possibly duplicate that sort of thing at home because of the expense."

"The problem is that they do not know how to take out a wall, so you end up with enormous difficulties trying to move the camera around. In order to remove one wall, you have to wait three days. The delays are killing; but that's all part of the adjustment one must make in a place that is tuned to a different tempo of working."

"THE RUSSIANS work very slowly and they quit after eight hours. There is no such thing as working overtime. If you're in the middle of a scene, they go home. And they have a very notorious way of disappearing when you need them most. However, I've seen nothing but warmth and courtesy. I scream at them, but never rudely or offensively."

"There's a lot of complaining going on here and I am getting very bored with the bellyaching. Even in the golden days of Hollywood, there were plenty of problems. There are always problems. But they are doing their best with a friendly human spirit, which I must emphasize has been sadly lacking on some of the American sets I've worked on."

"They have enormous curiosity and they are always indulging me with little gifts. They gave me a pin which says 'ENEMY OF CAPITALISM' and every time I wear it on the set they scream with laughter. But there has never been a sense of being enemies here. I am very sensitive and very sensible about that. Now that doesn't mean every day is Christmas. I yell at them and they become very offended, but then I explain to them that this is par for the course on all Hollywood sets and this is ordinary director behavior and it's done in the greatest good nature."

"You know the white slavers didn't force me to come here. I knew exactly what I was getting into. I just didn't know it would go on this long. I am also bored with American newspapers and magazines emphasizing the difficulties instead of the wonderful opportunities that exist for working together. We came here with our eyes open. Nobody forced a single actor to come here and it's very impolite to the Russians to show how unhappy we are. Actors are a pain in the ass anyway."

DIRECTOR George Cukor — even his genius may not save joint Russian-American film effort, "The Bluebird."

"But if this film is ever finished, you will have been here a year...."

"Hell, I did 'My Fair Lady' for a year. I was in Universal a year before that."

"ARE YOU COMPARING Russia to Universal?"

"In a way. All movie locations are the same. Nothing goes like clockwork anywhere. Elizabeth Taylor has been very ill, but a darling. I wish to god she had some chili. That's been her chief complaint. But she is a total professional. She has been no trouble at all."

Ava Gardner is unnecessarily nervous and pressy, but she's always been that way. Everyone in show business complains, except of course directors, who as we all know are noble, long-suffering creatures. But we are not in Burbank and to complain seems genuinely unfriendly and rude to the Russians."

Nevertheless, the delays and the pressures have put Cukor in a tenuous position. The fatigue shows. He spends most of his time on the set trying to explain what he wants helplessly to interpreters who get everything confused in translation. It takes twice as long to get one shot as it ever did back home, yet back home it is Cukor who gets blamed. "I am keeping a log of the delays, so in six months or a year when I'm reproached for this I can make the record clear. Then everyone will know what was caused by my ineptitude and recalcitrance and what was caused by fog, rain and the Russians."

Will the film be anything like the Shirley Temple version of the Maeterlinck fantasy? "No speakie English," he recoils in horror. "You will persist in asking piquant questions, won't you?" And he will persist in answering them by making terrible faces and giving charming smiles the tape recorder cannot record. "There is nothing easy in this business, but that's part of the hazard of being in it. My God, I worked with Judy Garland. This is a picnic compared to that. The only easy things I ever did were the pictures with Tracy and Hepburn."

"Nothing with Kate is difficult because she's an artist and a distinguished person. When I did 'Love Among the Ruins' with her, she said, at 7 o'clock in the morning, 'Aren't we lucky to be in such a marvelous business?' She had been up since five and, instead of complaining, she was alive with the joy, excitement and privilege of working and I think her words should be engraved on a pin and all actors forced to wear it. There are inconveniences and sometimes you don't feel like doing it, but part of the actors' job is to behave themselves."

Whatever the nightmares, George Cukor isn't admitting a thing. You have to admire that kind of practically Victorian chin-up style. If "The Bluebird" is ever finished it will be a miracle according to everyone connected with it. But Cukor has performed miracles before. Good or bad, it will be a miracle with style.

the Formula

By NORMAN H. STARK

Lemon oil furniture polish smells good, but the price for a bottle of it stinks. Here's another "inflation-beater" formula which will keep your checking account bright and your furniture shiny.

You will need some LEMON extract (it doesn't do any good except to make the oil smell like lemon), MINERAL OIL and a plastic spray bottle (available at supermarkets or hardware and variety stores).

Mix ten drops of the LEMON extract into one quart of MINERAL OIL and transfer to bottle. Spray sparingly on furniture, and polish with a soft cloth.

The cost of making your own lemon oil furniture polish is approximately six cents per ounce. To determine your savings, divide the cost of your store-bought brand by the number of ounces it contains. Then compare the per ounce cost — you'll be surprised at how much you can save for so little effort.

Note: Material costs are based on the prices at retail outlets of national drug, grocery and hardware chains. These costs will vary, depending on the geographic area. If you wish to make up a larger quantity — and save even more — buy your materials at a chemical supply company (see the Yellow Pages).

(Like any product you make at home, you should store this one safely, label it — listing ingredients and noting any cautions — and keep it out of reach of children.)

Pulitzer Prize Winner, 1958.

Instant it happened

After 23 years of teasing pictures out of everyday events, this was just another parade to Bill Beall of the Washington Daily News. But the editor had a fondness for the Chinese, and the Chinese had a fondness for parades.

So when the Hip Sing Chinese Merchants' Association dedicated a new building in Washington's tiny Chinatown, they held a parade. And Beall drew the photo assignment. It was a hot, sultry tenth of September, 1957, and Beall, at 204 pounds and 36 years, had one main thought: get the picture and get back. He stood there clicking away at the great paper dragon as it went by, steeling himself against the rattle of firecrackers. Out of the corner of his eye...

Beall sees the little boy step from the curb, intrigued by the floating paper dragon with people legs. But after two unsteady steps he faces no paper dragon but two long legs in blue. The policeman bends down like some vastly older brother, and says in essence, "The firecrackers will get you if you don't watch out." Beall whirls and catches the picture.

Whatever else was said was lost in a fresh barrage of firecrackers, and the fickleness of memory. All that is left is the picture. Back in the newsroom, Beall developed his film, confirmed what his eyes saw through the camera sight. He told the editor, "I think I have a real one."

The picture won prize after prize. The boy, Allen Weaver, grew up. The cop, Maurice Cullinane, became assistant chief of police.

Law firm admits it's all wet

A COUPLE OF people even went swimming at the home of Sterling and Carolee Clayton.

Annual party for members of the law firm of Wise (George and Pat) Kilpatrick (Bob and Judy) and Clayton started at the Claytons with swimming, snacks and attitude adjustment.

Properly adjusted, the group adjourned to the Kilpatricks' Belmont Heights home for dining and dancing.

Some of the Clayton youngsters were on hand — Scott, Mark, Solihnan and Elaine.

Among attorneys, secretaries et al were Don Meyer, Phil and Karen Madden, John and Sandy Nelson, Mike Klein, Doug Easton, and Jay Hartz.

More were Judi Nelson, Fred and Jan Goff, John Ehrke, Bob and Barbara Schoeppler, Allen and Karen Houser, Mical and Paula Gowdy, Jim and Kathy Decker, Gary and Sandy Culbertson and Don and Sharon Parkins.

ATTENTION old timers — and more recent residents, too.

A party is on deck for Frances Neilsen who has retired after 51 years as owner/headmistress of Progress School.

The committee is looking for former students and others who have been associated with the school. Party will be held in St. Luke's Episcopal Church Parish Hall on Aug. 24.

Please make your reservations with Joan Hutchinson, 3721 Myrtle, Long Beach, 90807.

DID YOU KNOW that Disneyland is 20 years old?

Some of the kids who worked at the park when it first opened have grown-up kids of their own now. I don't usually tell of reunions until plans are firm but in the case of the Disneyland reunion I'll make an exception because if they don't hear from 300 former Disneylanders who worked at the park between 1955 and 1960, they won't be going to have one.

So get busy and write to former Golden Horseshoe gals: Vera Pitzel (Mrs. Jerry) 1240 Ironwood, La Habra, 90631, or Shirley Scherer 3608 Ladoga Ave., Long Beach 90808.

They are hoping to have the reunion sometime in November.

WHEN THE ALPERTS plan a surprise, they do it in a big way.

Twenty-four pickup truckloads of food were transported to Houghton Park to feed 160 hungry picnickers.

Occasion was to honor Ray Alpert's mother, Mary, on her 80th birthday.

AND to surprise Ray's sister and brother-in-law, Janet and Jake Farber, on their silver wedding anniversary.

Ray and his wife, Barbara were assisted by their children, Alan, Teri and Nancy and good neighbors Roy and Audrey Hyde.

carolyn mcdowell

NELLIE LEWIS had three parties to celebrate her birthday, but when you are 102 years old the occasion calls for a big celebration.

The honoree makes her home with daughter, Pearl Bourdo. Bixby Knolls neighbors, Roger and Margaret Sherman hosted a party for neighbors to say Happy Birthday to Nellie just before the Shermans left for Europe.

Next day there was a family party and the day after that Nellie celebrated with her friend, "Frankie" Wise who is somewhat younger.

ANY EXCUSE is a good excuse for a party. So Mae Ray had one.

She invited members of her 1972 Assistance League provisional class to swim and lunch along with committee members from the League who are helping her sew all of the costumes for the League's Haunted House which will open at Bullock's Lake-wood during Halloween.

Mae not only said thank you with lunch but as each guest left, she presented her with a created-by-Mae hanging macrame basket.

Lucky guests included League President Oranice Webb, Virginia Eagleson, Marilyn Brock, Dian Brown, Joanne Timmons, Maggie Nees and Virginia Todd.

ONE MORE... Reunion for members of Wilmington's Banning High School Class of 1955.

Actually they are having two reunions. A dinner dance on Oct. 4 at Long Beach Elk's Club and a follow-up picnic for the whole family the next day. They haven't chosen a park as yet because they need to know how many picnickers there will be.

Please write to Dottie Ciancaglini Schugg, 4180 Ironwood Ave., Seal Beach 90740.

THE NEW ETIQUETTE

Washing dishes might break habit

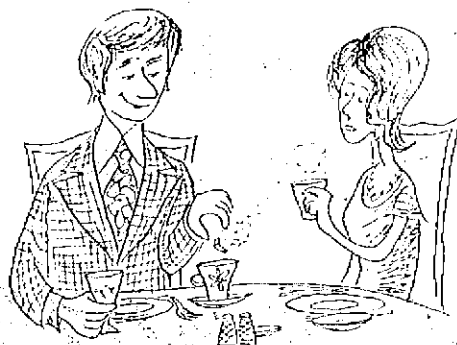

Q. My husband insists on dropping his cigarettes butts into half-filled coffee cups, or putting the cigarettes out on a plate. I've told him often that I don't like this. What should I do?

A. Have him do the dishes every time. If he tries it, he probably won't like it.

Q. I am going to be married in September. The girl I plan to marry originally planned to use her maiden name after we were married. Now she has the bright idea to put our names together with a hyphen. We'll be the Williams-Smiths. I really don't like this much because I think it's cumbersome. What can I tell her?

A. If you think it's cumbersome now, just wait. Say you have a daughter called Susan Williams-Smith. Say she decides to marry a man called David Black-Jones. Will the family become the Williams-Smith-Black-Joneses? That's why using a maiden name is a better arrangement.

By the way, females over 18 don't like to be called "girls" much any more. How would you like to be 45 and have your wife say you were a "nice boy"? Men do this kind of thing to women all the time.

Q. My husband and I were invited to a party which was really bizarre. Our hostess called and asked me if we would like to come to a barbecue. I accepted, then she said, "By the way, you should bring your own meat."

I was astounded, and as I walked up to these people's house with my raw meat, I said to my husband, "This can't be true. I must have made a mistake. Nobody brings their own meat." What do you think of that arrangement?

A. People are accustomed to bringing along liquor or potato salad, so there's no reason why you couldn't bring your own meat. But I would have preferred to see the hostess ask you to bring a salad.

The mistake the hostess made was not asking you to bring meat, but letting you accept the invitation before she spelled out all the conditions.

Q. I am about to be married in a few months. Is it correct etiquette to send your godmother a corsage? Through the years she has always remembered my birthday and any special events.

A. I like this idea a lot. Since there is too much formal etiquette around, and too many rules which people think they must follow, many people end up doing the minimum. They will, for instance, consult an etiquette book to see who must get flowers, and do just what the book says... no more or no less. Your godmother will be touched by your thoughtfulness.

Q. My daughter plays with an 8-year-old girl who hasn't been taught any manners at home. This girl always asks for food, and has even walked into the house and taken cookies from the cookie jar. One time she had breakfast with us. She picked up her sausage and her melon in her hands, and ate her pancakes with a spoon. My daughter started giving her instructions on how to eat. I was embarrassed.

Should I discuss her lack of manners with her mother? Or should I teach her myself?

A. Don't call the mother. When she asks for food, tell her that you have a policy of not giving food to children over five who ask. I wouldn't let your daughter badger her, since manners are not taught well by humiliation. Have the girl over to eat often, and she will probably pick up convention by watching. The girl has the right to use unusual ways of eating when she's an adult, of course. But she should learn the way most people eat so that she won't be picked on.

(If you have questions about the new etiquette, or want to share your comments and ideas, write to Ms. Reardon, care of the Independent, Press-Telegram. Questions of general interest will be discussed in future columns.)

Aces on bridge

By IRA CORN Team Captain

Dear Mr. Corn:
We have a player in our club who is constantly volunteering unsolicited lessons. She is a Life Master and seems to think she's more qualified and capable than the rest of us. Is there a way to squelch the problem?

Brainwashed
Columbus, Ohio

Answer: I'm not sure. Sometimes there is no solution other than flight. However, you might try this one on her.

Jerry Machlin, ACBL director from Washington, D.C., tells a story about Tobias Stone of New York City. One night Machlin remarked that every good bridge player secretly thinks he is better than he really is. Stone agreed, but with one exception.

"That applies to every good player but me," Stone said. "I couldn't possibly think I am as good as I really am."

Dear Mr. Corn:

Do the penalty tricks for a revoke score towards game if a part score is made? We bid two hearts, made three and received two penalty tricks. Do we score a game?

Big Score Willows, Calif.

Answer: Game and slam bonuses are awarded only for games and slams actually bid. If not bid, penalty tricks are scored as overtricks.

Dear Mr. Corn:

We bid these hands to a grand slam and the opponents were rude enough to cash the spade ace. Who gets the blame for reaching seven?

Stubbed Toe
St. Helena, Calif.

Answer: West made two errors and should get 100 per cent of the blame. First he passed a perfectly legitimate opening bid. Then he tried to make up and gambled a grand slam. I suggest this bidding:

Dear Mr. Corn:

The bidding went:

North	South
3♠	Pass

South had a weak hand with three spades and four clubs. Was the pass correct?

Goal Tending
Salinas, Calif.

Answer: South should have bid three spades. Opener's rebid in a new suit at the three level is always a forcing bid. Responder should return to opener's first suit.

CLO dilemma: which way to change?

By ELISE EMERY
Arts Editor

From petticoats and pantaloons to a spirited strip tease dash for the downy double.
This is the change from Long Beach Civic Light Opera's first production in 1950 to the final one of its current season.

Change? Conceded.
Progress? That's the moot point pondered by general manager Harvey Waggoner, CLO's board of directors and its staunchly loyal audience, many of whom have followed the company from its first show — Gilbert and Sullivan's "H.M.S. Pinafore" — to 1975's season conclusion with "Company."

But whatever anyone else's concern, the final responsibility for the quality of CLO's productions, and the audiences they attract, is Waggoner's. Of this, he is deeply aware.

Next season's shows are scheduled: "Jesus Christ Superstar," "Most Happy Fella" and "Sweet Charity."

Although CLO has bobbed from one crisis to another, as do most entertainment enterprises, it always has managed to float to the top. Solidly policy, staging, casting and personnel, the Workshop encountered no serious objections about programming. Its audiences grew. Eventually, the company moved its performances to the Concert Hall of the Municipal Auditorium — the one which was demolished this year to make way for proposed new facilities in Pacific Terrace.

BY THEN, the yeast of change was at work. In the "Show Boat" program was this note: "It is readily apparent that although the Singers' Workshop is already a big business, it is not a money making business. The vital fact is — if it weren't for the civic minded individuals who support the Workshop through the patronage program, the group would not be able to give the people of Long Beach the best of light opera and musical comedy."

Then came a shocker. At a board meeting, producer-director Henri Scanlon read a letter dated Aug. 20, 1957, announcing his resignation. In an interview for the Press-Telegram, Scanlon explained, "I feel as though part of my heart has gone. But I began to realize that the Workshop has gotten too big from the way it was originally planned. It is big business now."

James Boyd, who had become active in the company took over, because "Finian's Rainbow" already was scheduled, advertised and well underway. Boyd unswervingly believed, "There is no democracy in theater and the producer must be in command at all times — good and bad." In other words, there's no democracy at the top. The manager is, ultimately, responsible.

VARIOUS adjustments took place as the company grew. One was a change of name to Long Beach Civic Light Opera effective January, 1959. In 1958, Waggoner had been appointed the company's first full-time business manager; at the same time other new staff assignments were made. In 1960, he was named general manager. He starred, in February, 1961, in a repeat performance of "The Merry Widow" and at this time announced that at the close of the production he would retire from on-stage appearances to devote all his time to the job of being general manager.

HARVEY WAGGONER

Changes, of course, haven't been limited to one civic light opera company in one city. They have influenced every phase of life, bringing joys and heartaches of new lifestyles which often are at odds with tradition.

It's this conflict of contemporary times that Waggoner must deal with realistically.

THROUGHOUT the years, CLO's reports have noted that critics have stamped a show an artistic success — but that it's been a financial failure.

Too, there is the pull between patrons who want only productions that are family-oriented and others who urge a more contemporary approach.

Seemingly, it is an immutable law that public demands outpace resources. Financial problems are practically taken for granted. That's an uphill road that isn't likely to level out. In 1958, the City of Long Beach first recognized CLO's community contribution by allocating the company $1,500 in its annual budget.

The 1959 "Pinafore" cost $35. Today, production costs have soared on every score. With the demise of the Concert Hall, CLO moved to Jordan High School Auditorium, a move that necessitated extensive improvements to the hall. Props, sets, costumes, all of the technical aspects, are more costly. CLO now uses equity people, often as stars of the shows. City aid has increased, this year to $40,000. As always, CLO members appear for many city functions and give freely back to the community.

JUST NOW, Waggoner's nagging headache concerns programming. It's really not a new headache. In 1960, critics praised CLO for producing "a more modern show." It was "Plain and Fancy." And it was not a financial success. In 1964, a review of "The Unsinkable Molly Brown" noted that the show was good but that the material was "sometimes a little on the raw side."

Waggoner recently did an 11-year scan of CLO's productions. During that period there were 38 shows. Of these, 17 showed a profit, 13 showed a loss, 8 broke even.

Waggoner says, "Just as random observations: From February, 1970, through June, 1972, of eight productions six were winners, two breakevens, no losses. The season immediately following, 1973-74, three straight losses. Of shows with stars, 'Hello, Dolly!' with Martha Raye (1971-72), 'Kismet' with Howard Keel (1972-73), 'Guys and Dolls' with John Saxon (1973-74) and 'Applause' with Nannette Fabray (1973-74) lost. The winners consisted mostly of classics (the oldest, 'Oklahoma') and the losers in the lesser known but worthwhile shows such as 'Gypsy,' 'Carnival,' 'Take Me Along,' 'Where's Charley?' and 'Company' category. The only really old standard, 'Student Prince,' broke even."

AFTER "COMPANY" came the greatest number of objecting letters ever received by CLO — six. They took exception to the marijuana scene, the language, the lack of hummable tunes and the bed scene.

But audiences, for the most part, left the auditorium chuckling at the humor, the satire of today's mixed-up lifestyle and the honesty of the show.

Waggoner answered each letter. He wrote "What we are trying to offer our patrons is a program of entertainment...that will satisfy the preferences of traditionalist and modernist alike. Can you imagine how difficult this is? Half our audience feels that nothing worthwhile has been written since 'Oklahoma' and the other half insists that only the contemporary, the 'relevant' works have any value! Combine this dilemma with the painful truth that the creation of new musical productions has, in recent years, been reduced to a trickle..."

"For most of our years of existence we have been criticized for presenting too many 'oldies but goodies.' To counter that, our recent goal has been to present the traditional 'classic' production, sandwiched between two contemporary offerings. We appreciate your letter, because it expresses a definite opinion and your concern for the future of Civic Light Opera."

These critical letters trouble Waggoner. He wants to find a formula that pleases everyone.

Not that he's likely to. Not in a time when the name of the game is change. And which way the change goes, nobody knows.

arts entrenched as one of Long Beach's most valued cultural organizations, it enjoys the support, advice and concern of many of its original members plus thousands of new viewers.

SO, WHAT'S the problem?

There was no protest, in 1950, when CLO — then known as Singers' Workshop — staged "Pinafore." Henri Scanlon and Richard Preston, aware of the amount of talent in Long Beach, organized the Workshop. That year the fledgling company also produced Gilbert and Sullivan's "Trial by Jury" and "The Pirates of Penzance." In 1951, it did "The Mikado" and two separate productions of "Pinafore." It even ventured beyond Gilbert and Sullivan with Gian Carlo Menotti's "The Telephone," Kurt Weill's "Down in the Valley" and "Jerome Kern in Song and Fashions" with special musical arrangements.

In those early years, there were "Roberta," "The Desert Song," "Music in the Air," "Rose Marie," "The Merry Widow," "Song of Norway" and others of the kind.

In many, Waggoner was leading man. For its 15th production, the Workshop scored a first. "Show Boat" had opened on Broadway in 1927 and though frequently revived it had never been done by any but a professional company. In 1955, the Workshop received performance rights, the first time these had been granted to an amateur group.

LBMA opens exhibit

"Seldom Seen: Selections From the Permanent Collection" will open at Long Beach Museum of Art today. The show will continue through Sept. 28.

The 31 oils, prints, drawings and sculpture were selected by Karl Nickel, deputy director of exhibitions/collections. They represent gifts from the community and from private individuals as well as works purchased with funds made available by the National Endowment for the Arts, and by the Rick Rackers, the junior auxiliary of the Assistance League of Long Beach.

Some of the artists whose work is shown are Alexander Archipenko, David Gilhooly, Morris Graves, Craig Kauffman, Gabriel Kohn, William Wilhelm and James R. Wood.

Other acquisitions which may be seen include two lithographs by Thomas Hart Benton and a Conte crayon drawing by George Bellows. The latter, titled "1880 Group," done in 1923, is the gift of Mr. and Mrs. William Fadiman. Two examples of early Japanese Edo period pieces are a bronze urn, the gift of the Museum-Association, and a screen depicting "Philosophers in a Grove," the gift of Dr. Raphael Hanson.

The museum, 2300 E. Ocean Blvd., is open Wednesday through Sunday from noon to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

'OSCAR Wilde in America' at LBMA is the gift of the National Endowment of the Arts and of the Rick Rackers. The bronze was created by Michael de Lisio in 1969.

"I'm always going to garage sales and hunting for bargains. Now, I want to give one. Can you offer some 'sale-on — sail-in' tips?"

By REBA & BONNIE CHURCHILL

If you want to sell, buy, swap or bargain hunt, a garage sale is a "must" on your schedule. It's the new trend in do-it-yourself shopping or selling. For planning a sale, here are some tips.

Advertise the fact with a homemade sign on a tree or post, or through a classified ad in your newspaper. Then, have a record book handy so you can list the items sold and the prices paid. Also, have enough currency that you can make change.

Try to have a variety of items displayed — such as plants, books, silver, pictures, furniture etc. If it's worn or weathered, be sure to tag it "as is." This is especially true with chairs, tables, stools, etc. Tell the buyer if it has a rung missing or a weak leg; then she will understand the "as is" price and be able to figure the repairs.

Most garage sales feature a bargain table. Here, they list "Everything $2" or a similar low price. This generally is the attention-getter at the sale.

If you are shopping for a bargain, there are other special helps to keep in mind. As Carol Carr illustrates, if it's fine crystal, a tap with the fingernail will cause it to ring. If it's really home china, you can usually tell either by the name and marking on the back of the plate or by holding it up to the light to see if it has a translucent quality. Cut glass is heavy to lift. If it's a bicycle or moveable item, ask to try it out to be sure it works properly.

The workshop

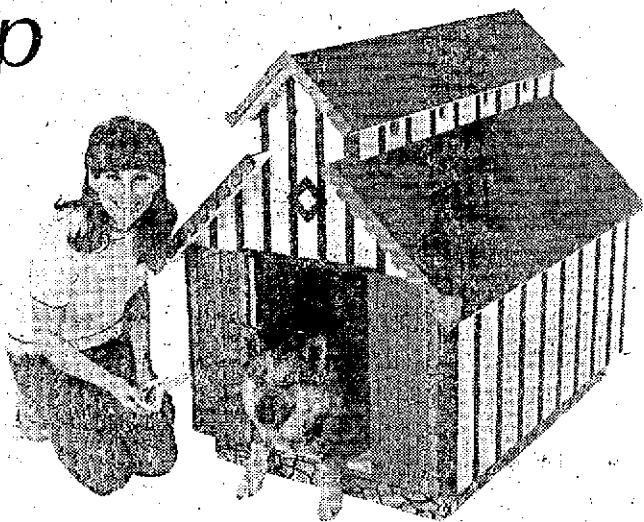

Throughout history the dog has been man's dedicated colleague, serving him well as shepherd, guardian, guide, fellow hunter and above all, as a companion and very close friend. Perhaps that explains why so many dogs are called Pal. A dog can say more beautiful, heart-warming things simply by wagging his tail than legions of poets, social workers and philosophers.

When a pet has so many wonderful qualities, then we should do a few nice things for "man's best friend." If you think as much of your dog as he does of you, then you'll see to it that he has a snug, warm, well-ventilated and clean house to sleep in.

The house pictured here with Carol Merrill and friend, is designed just the way your dog will like it. It's built up off the ground to keep it dry. It's big enough for a large dog, as you can see from the German Shepherd in it.

Here is a project that can be undertaken with confidence by all amateur home carpenters. No problem at all when you use the full-size pattern. And, when you build it yourself, the cost is within the budget of everyone... an ideal project for boys as well as adults.

To obtain the full-size pattern No. 448 for building the dog house, send $1.75 (includes postage and handling) by cash, check or money order to: Steve Ellingson, Long Beach Independent Press Telegram, Pattern Dept., P. O. Box 2383, Van Nuys, Ca. 91409.

Social concerns collide with depositors' rights

accountability question for those who borrow." Holden wants savings and loan associations to include reports on the disposition of loan applications in the annual reports to depositors.

LOWERY ADMITS to weaknesses in the Center's redlining report. For example, if no one in a prime lending area applied for a loan, there would have been no record of a loan made during the five-month period examined and the area would have been redlined.

But in general he supports the accuracy of the map which outlines in red vast areas in which minorities, the aged and low income groups reside.

While he doubts that redlining is the direct result of racial discrimination by lenders, lending wanes when black or Mexican-Americans move into neighborhoods. Conventional mortgage loans are replaced by FHA or VA insured loans and ultimately there is little or no lending at all.

Which comes first? The decay, the minorities or the redlining? No one seems to know for sure, but Lowery thinks financial institutions are instrumental in hastening the deterioration of neighborhoods. "They can make it come true," he charges.

He is challenging the claim by some institutions that lending in some redlined areas is as risky as they say it is. "The state ought to make public which urban areas of California are being redlined." They should be defined as "priority areas" and some of the money currently going to cities like Beverly Hills or Sherman Oaks should be allocated to loan-starved areas.

Lowery challenges the right of banks and savings and loan associations "to sit back and assess risk in terms of what other institutions are doing."

DEAN CANNON, on the other hand, insists on the right of financial institutions to make loan judgments independent of social concerns. Lenders are mandated by law to protect their depositors. "This is the central theme of the argument offered by those who oppose the law which, they claim, would force them to violate a trust placed in them by depositors."

Cannon is executive vice president of the California League of Savings and Loan Associations which is lobbying in opposition to Holden's bill.

"I don't think disclosure would be helpful," he says. "In the long run it would be more harmful, because the next step would be for some pressure group to force a lender to make a specific volume amount of loans in a high risk area."

State regulations and the League "insist that sound lending practices be followed."

There is no racism involved. "It's basically an economic issue." There is no collusion, conspiracy or any sort of concerted effort in redlining, he claims. "Each association makes lending judgments based on policy and recommendations of its staff."

He thinks neither the problem nor the solution should be the exclusive responsibility of savings and loan associations. "Other people in the field — banks, insurance companies, mortgage companies — should participate in finding the solution."

Cannon says part of the answer is to make cities enforce building codes in order to stop urban decay.

Cannon has an ally in Jaye Hunter, president of the Long Beach Board of Realtors.

HUNTER DEFENDS the right of savings and loan associations to refuse to make loans in areas where they have experienced foreclosures and have been forced to take back property.

He argues that the public and realtors are foolish if they try to force lenders to do something which is uneconomical for them. "If the lender doesn't have any money to lend out because he has lost his shirt in places where he shouldn't have been lending, then everybody suffers."

Opponents of redlining are asking lenders to risk money which belongs to their depositors. "For business to be told to make a loan that's unsafe...that's bad law...asking companies to risk depositor money which by law they are required to invest safely. Lenders have money from little old ladies and from students as well as from the wealthy," he says.

Hunter blames the problem on consumers: "If landlords in the areas where they say they are redlining had the ability by law either to collect rent or to get rid of a tenant in a quick and judicious manner, there would be very little foreclosure of property because of nonpayment. The whole blame can be laid to legislation which enables the consumer to walk all over the businessman."

He also blames the loss of traditional values. He wonders whatever happened to the handshake and promises like, "I'll do what I say I will do. I will pay you when I say I will. I won't lie to you." Hunter wonders what happened to those values. "I know they can't legislate them back in."

OTIS SULLIVAN feels differently. He is also a member of the Long Beach Board of Realtors and as chairman of its equal opportunities committee he is flatly opposed to redlining. He thinks it is based on racial discrimination and speculates that "Belmont Shore would be redlined if blacks moved into the area...even if they could afford it."

"When an area is integrated lenders take a longer look at it. They stop lending as freely. Their action causes reaction...It's like taking milk from a baby."

He says it is customary for realtors to shop around on the telephone for a loan and in redlined areas they are told simply, "We are not making loans here." Written applications are not made in most cases, according to Sullivan.

Sullivan's committee has submitted a resolution in support of the anti-redlining bill to the Long Beach Board of Realtors. Hunter says he has not seen it yet.

Donald E. Burns, California's secretary of business and transportation, thinks Holden's bill has merit and "may be used as a vehicle for whatever legislative change needs to be made."

He supports disclosure because "people do things in secret they would not do if they were exposed to public view."

"It is worthwhile for the public to know which institutions are lending in certain areas and which are not. That way they can make decisions about depositing their money."

Burns sees this as "vastly preferable to a situation where coercion is used" to eliminate redlining.

He also believes making information about loans and applications available would help lending institutions determine how their activity compares with other companies.

Burns disagrees with those who think savings and loan associations do not have a social responsibility in the manner in which they distribute mortgage money.

"It comes from a concrete thing, a publicly mandated monopoly." According to Burns, if you operate a savings and loan, "the state is letting you have a cushy, competitive situation. It's not like opening a drug store or a candy store."

"On the other hand," Burns says, "we're not going to propose that savings and loan associations be required to make a lot of loans where they will lose money. We have to make older areas of cities and towns more desirable places to lend."

He recommends a balance be achieved between the lenders' responsibilities to depositors and borrowers.

LARRY ULVESTAD, president of the Anaheim Savings and Loan Association, is an articulate advocate of competition among lending institutions and he believes disclosure of information will prove that "free competition is still alive and well in the industry."

Redlining occurs in some areas of Orange County, not as the result of racial discrimination or a conspiracy against the poor or collusion among lenders, according to Ulvestad, but because savings and loan associations are making decisions without hard data.

"When we see a redlined area in some part of Orange County the implication is that large savings and loan associations have looked at it and determined something is wrong. We're not going to accept that...and rely on those people's judgments. We're certainly going to take a look for ourselves."

And when he looks he sees interesting things happening in parts of downtown Santa Ana, Orange and Anaheim. Increases in the cost of housing have forced people to go back into some neighborhoods and fix up older homes. Part of it is a social phenomenon among younger couples who are finding "pleasant shelter choices" and large rooms in some of the older buildings. There is also a little nostalgia involved, Ulvestad explains.

It is important to him as an economist and the head of a financial institution because the subtle change is forecasting a massive shift in life styles in Southern California brought about chiefly by increases in the cost of gasoline and housing.

"People can no longer afford to live in Westlake and drive 110 miles a day to work in Westwood. That part of our lifestyle has peaked out," Ulvestad believes.

If savings and loan associations defect, this change and respond to it redlining will be virtually eliminated, at least in marginal housing areas or those in decline, he says.

And they should respond. Savings and loan associations have never been a rich man's industry.

Ulvestad, who is a member of the board of directors of the California League of Savings and Loan Associations, says they were created after the turn of the century to serve neighborhoods where commercial banks would not make loans.

Anaheim Savings and Loan, which now has eight branches in four counties, is typical. It was called the Anaheim Building and Loan Association 55 years ago when it was started by German orange growers who could not get loans from banks.

"The savings and loan associations represented a populist movement. Their roots go back to providing loans for people who couldn't get them elsewhere. They served large middle income and blue collar worker populations in direct response to the fact that commercial banks would only make real estate loans to certain families," Ulvestad says.

It is one of the ironies of our affluent society that the lending institutions need to be reminded of the role they were created to fill in the mortgage lending market.

And perhaps that is what the controversial measure against redlining is all about.

Ulvestad, in typical Orange County fashion, whittles the problem down to bumper sticker size when he says, "People borrow money. Areas don't borrow money."

minorities. For example, mortgage lending ranged from $1 per capita in all-Hispanic (Spanish speaking) neighborhoods to $125 in areas with fewer than 5 per cent Hispanic. The Center claims lending policies have resulted in discrimination against all-Hispanic, all-black or racially mixed areas.

"The all-white areas of the city (Los Angeles) receive about twice as much per capita as any integrated area," the report states.

Discrimination by income level is suggested in comparisons of lending per capita and the value of homes — $256 per capita where homes exceed $50,000 in value and 75 cents where they range between $15,000 and $17,000.

PROFILES OF THE 12 major redlined communities include a listing of the state-chartered savings and loan associations in or near the area.

The redlined area of Long Beach, for example, is served by branches of Gibraltar, Great Western,

Palos Verdes

The lending pattern shifts dramatically in the Palos Verdes peninsula where 63,588 residents were able to borrow more than $36 million. That's $454.99 per capita and represents 576 loans in 10 census tracts. Only 7 per cent of the residents are members of minority groups.

Home Savings and Empire Savings and Loan Associations.

Together they have 67,231 savings accounts with more than $200 million in deposits.

"An important indication of these institutions' responsiveness to the communities in which they are located is the amount of money they take from an area in deposits compared to their loans in that area," the report asserts.

The county is the home of the largest savings and loan associations and some of the largest banks in the nation. Home Savings, Great Western, American, California Federal and Glendale Federal are the five largest in Los Angeles and among the top five in the nation. Their deposits total $15 billion.

The Center for New Corporate Priorities says it is unable to determine how much of this deposit money is available for lending because the information is not available to the public.

The report concluded by noting that attempts to eliminate redlining have focused on incentive programs like community redevelopment rather than on direct confrontation with financial institutions. Lending patterns, the CNCP report claims, reveal that one-seventh of the Los Angeles population is "loan starved" and that attempts to encourage investment in redlined areas have not worked.

Therefore the Center recommends the following for financial institutions:

- Disclosure of lending and deposit information.
 - Reforms in branching and chartering requirements by state government including a charter renewal every five years which would require them to submit a plan outlining proposals for lending in "high priority areas."
 - Regulations and laws prohibiting redlining.
 - Public representation on state and federal regulatory agencies.
 - Conscious credit allocation systems which would channel such things as state pension funds and tax dollars on deposit into loans for priority areas.
- CNCP Director Jim Lowery says the Center is planning no more research into the problem of redlining. The report and the map will not be updated.
- The organization, which operates on a budget of up to $50,000 a year, was formed in Los Angeles in 1970 to study the impact of corporations on society and to recommend measures to protect consumers.

Vast sections of the Harbor area are considered high risk by lenders. Only 17 loans were made totalling slightly more than $500,000. The result is that 52,145 residents of the area, 53.3 per cent minority, are loan-starved.

Compton

Only 21 loans were made in 5 months in Compton's 16 census tracts. A total of $352,445 in mortgage money was available. That's $2.41 for each of the 83,700 residents, most of whom are members of minority groups.

AT WIT'S END Europe just one hard roll after another

This year, millions of Americans are busing their way through Europe on package tours that offer scenic grandeur at budget prices.

My husband and I just whipped through nine countries in 21 days. (Okay, so I looked down to change the film in my camera and missed Italy.)

How are they able to offer this bargain to travelers, you ask?

Simple. The Continental Breakfast.

To the non-traveler, I must explain that the

bombeck

Continental Breakfast consists of a paper napkin, a knife, fork and spoon for which you have no use, a cup and saucer, a pot of coffee or tea, and a container of marmalade dated, "Please Use before July, 1936." Finally, two four-letter words that have come to strike terror in the hearts of travelers everywhere...the HARD ROLL.

The Continental Breakfast (literal translation: Keep Out of Reach of Children) has a gradual, but unmistakable effect on people who eat it for a period of ten days or more.

FOR THE FIRST several days, partakers of the hard roll will pretend it is just the thing they need...or the "Famine is Fun" number. Women will pinch their waists and say, "I've been eating too much on this trip. A light breakfast is just what I need."

The truth is, the hard roll is not designed to take off weight. Even though eaten in small pieces, once in the body, it will form again into its original hard ball and build a hard wall across the hips and stomach. After the 11th day, the hard rolls make you mean.

We had our first hard roll in Ireland on July 1. By July 15, the group was irritable and noncommunicative. On the 17th, while in Venice, my husband, in a fit of violence, grabbed a hard roll, carved his initials in it, "WLB, 1975" and sent it back to the kitchen.

BY THE 19TH DAY, the prospect of a hard roll for breakfast forced some travelers to remain in their beds with their faces turned to the wall. Others used the hard roll to pry their luggage open, prop open their doors, or to rub stubborn stains from their shirt collars.

On the 21st day, we looked at our last Continental Breakfast in Paris. My husband ran his fingers across a roll that was initialed, "WLB, 1975."

"It's just a coincidence, isn't it?" he asked. Some things, it's best not to know.

Pioneer Women set Adopt-a-Child lunch

The 17th annual Adopt-a-Child luncheon sponsored by the Long Beach and Los Angeles Councils of Pioneer Women will take place Thursday noon in the Century Plaza Hotel.

Actor Ross Martin, who starred in the television series, "Mr. Lucky" and "Wild, Wild West," will be featured speaker at the event, which benefits Pioneer Women's child care programs in Israel.

Proceeds from the $50 per person luncheon will go toward completion of a child care home and community center in Kiryat Yam, a community of indigent immigrants about 15 miles outside the port city of Haifa.

Mrs. David Simon, national coordinator for western area Pioneer Women, serves as chairwoman each year. In charge of arrangements for Long Beach Council, which has eight chapters in the area including the newest in Laguna Hills, is Mrs. William Mandel. Mrs. Mandel will take reservations at 2750 Ostrum Ave.

Also entertaining during the luncheon will be members of the Beverly Hills Civic Light Opera Company.

ELEGANCE and cosmopolitanism are a tangible presence in Hugo's Dining Room, the haute cuisine adjunct of the Edgewater Hyatt House, but the management and staff of the luxurious restaurant have not so habituated themselves to the niceties of serving a quiet, formal clientele that they cannot encounter and calmly cater to the sudden influx of an unanticipated crowd of newcomers.

The accustomed pace of Hugo's meticulous service allows diners to linger restfully over every unhurried step of superb dining. From slow perusal of the select cart du jour to savoring of each course as it is brought by careful and well-trained waiters, the room extends an atmosphere of sanctuary to those who care to pay well for the privilege of partaking well.

To this end, the prices at Hugo's are at substantial, though not exorbitant, levels. As overture to a fine dinner, available at $3.25 is the Gallie gourmet's special pleasure, Escargots Bourguignonne, or appetizer of fresh iced oysters on the half shell or a jumbo shrimp cocktail, at the same tariff.

However, just as available is the house's own Navy bean soup at only 75 cents — and perhaps more appealing to the wealthy yachtsman who has just come ashore from sharpening his appetite in the salt breezes of the San Pedro Channel.

Repasts to top such beginnings include the Chateaubriand Bouquetiere of prime tenderloin, to satiate the appetites of a crew of two for $17, or prime ribs au jus for $6.95, both dishes a la carte.

As full meals, dishes from two New Zealand lobster tails at $10.50, to savory shish kebab of lamb at $4.95, filet of sole meuniere, $4.50, and numerous other choices, include the usual salads and choices of potatoes and vegetables within the price.

Such classic dinners in a tranquil, classic atmosphere were at the pleasure of diners one recent Saturday night, when into Hugo's rolled a sudden wave of participants in drag boat championships from nearby Marine Stadium.

A momentary flurry passed through the dining room and tables filled up as the newcomers were seated. Then quietly appeared Steve Tsipitsis, the hotel's executive assistant food and beverage manager, to help organize the seating, and Frank Jimenez, Hugo's maitre d', circulated among the tables, not only advising but personally helping his waiter staff.

Though the atmosphere continued to hum a trifle, there was no mood of crisis, and the dining room soon showed its accustomed calm again.

PEGGY HECKEL
Camaraderies & daiquiris

IN A FRIENDLY camaraderie Chuck and Peggy Heckel keep their Keona, the "House of the Large Shrimp Cocktail," at 1115 E. Wardlow Road, humming along with lively family parties who enjoy doing some of the cooking themselves while dining out at economy prices.

The dinner standbys at Keona are steaks or a steak-and-lobster combination for which the customers pitch in at the big quadrant-shaped brick grill at the rear of the dining room.

The Heckels' commendable economies include an eight-ounce top sirloin at $2.50 and a 12-oz. at $3.25, with a 12-oz. "bulls-eye" steak from the eye rib cut at that same price. There is also a nightly special succulent one-pound thick porterhouse for $3.75.

Besides the shrimp cocktail motto, which relates to a luscious large one at 95 cents and a lush, luscious giant one for $1.90, the Keona's other slogan is, "We cook the lobster — you cook the steak." The latter is an advised recognition that the prize seafood is a bit too sensitive for broiling by happy amateurs.

However, even on the steaks, if the house hasn't too much of a rush on, the Keona waitresses will willingly look after that broiling for the customers.

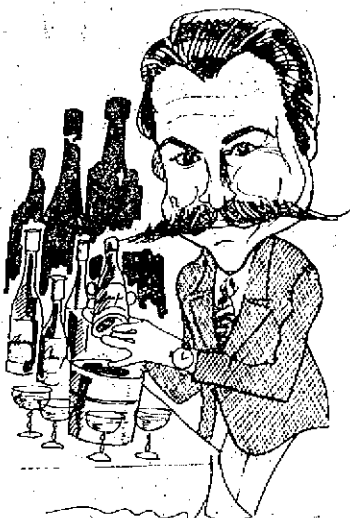

The salads and other fixings that go with the inexpensive dinners can also either be picked up by the customers, or the waitresses will serve them. In lunchtime hours, the Keona also features weekday specials in addition to the regular "You — We" broiler meals.

These specials, which are fully cooked in the Keona kitchen, include a Wednesday prime rib for $2.50, and on Friday different specials at $1.75 that rotate among pepper steak, Swiss steak or meat loaf. The lunch hour also includes the same broil-for-yourself features, which are available seven days a week from 11 a.m. to the nightly closing time of the big brick grill at 12:30 a.m.

At all times on the menu there is also a lengthy list of fully Keona-made sandwiches, ranging from the top price of $1.75 for the pastrami with fries and salad or the club with potato salad through a series at $1.50, including corned beef on rye (with potato salad), and beef either hot, barbecued or dip, to that humble favorite, a cheese sandwich at 90 cents.

Keona has a fully licensed bar, so a beer is available to brighten the cheese sandwich, or an assortment of bubbly from the wine list.

Other Keona specialties not to be overlooked are its mai-tai or daiquiri drinks at $1.50. The daiquiri also includes sub-specialties within the specials. In season, the Heckels offer a fresh strawberry or fresh peach daiquiri, between times standing with the "regular special" of a fresh banana daiquiri. Always, they're made with the fresh fruit, not reconstituted juices or stuff like that.

Playing games on PSA to San Francisco Bay

By HERB SHANNON
IP-T Travel Editor

Games people play are back on PSA. For most of the passengers on Pacific Southwest Airlines jet flights out of Long Beach Airport, the unannounced quiz contests and spontaneous treasure hunt exercises conducted by the cabin crew are a pleasant new way to spend the time en route to San Francisco, San Jose, Oakland or Sacramento.

But the games are no surprise to the stewardesses, who have been inventing ways to keep the customers happy since the days of the slower DC3 propeller planes.

When jetliners came along to shorten the flight between the Southland and the San Francisco Bay area to less than an hour, the contest pastime didn't seem to be necessary. But cabin crews continued to squeeze them into their busy schedule on occasion, just for the fun of it.

When the smiles on the faces of departing passengers on the lucky flights kept on matching the grin painted on the nose of PSA's birds, somebody upstairs got the message.

THE RESULT is a revival of the games under a new "Summer Fun Flights" policy. The surprise flights are designated at random throughout PSA's system daily, with prepared questionnaires and upgraded prizes for the winners. The former toys, trinkets and novelty awards which the stewardesses provided have been replaced with items of more intrinsic value.

First prize on a morning Long Beach fun flight last week was a three-pound Italian salami, good for a month's supply of home-made pizza or hero sandwiches. Second prize, more popular with the younger set, was a five-pound Ghirardelli candy bar, biggest in the business. Third was a pair of tickets to Marineland, followed by a host of lesser goodies as consolation awards.

Contest forms were distributed to the passengers aboard the 727 jet before takeoff in order to fit the format into the 55-minute flight to San Francisco. Cabin crew chief Justine Peterson announced the rules for the game of the day, a quiz on TV programs and other trivia.

"These are hard questions," she warned over the public address system. "What was the name of Jungle Jim's chimpanzee?"

Entering into the spirit of the occasion, Capt. Jim Thomas opened the cockpit microphone to suggest a possible answer: "Hairy Jim?"

WINNERS of the first prize salami, for answering correctly the names of Santa's eight reindeer, were Christmas Carol experts Rose and Richard Rockford, 2864 San Vicente Ave., Long Beach, in seats 18E and F.

By the time contest forms were collected and judged and the prizes distributed, including the five-pound chocolate dentist's despair to 13-year-old Robin Cole of Santa Ana, the fun flight was descending. Even the non-winners were smiling as they filed out of the plane at San Francisco.

According to a PSA spokesman, the program has been so well received the airline plans to continue it after the summer season. The response also has inspired the stewardesses to think up their own game plans.

In a recent classic example, the cabin crew chief discarded the official quiz of the day, offering the grand prize to the first passenger producing both pocket comb and hairpiece. To her surprise, an instant winner came down the aisle, tipping his toupee right and left.

By coincidence, the early afternoon flight back to Long Beach was another fun and games selection out of PSA's impartial computer. Cabin crew chief Michelle Auffarth flipped the company script over her shoulder and announced an original version.

The prizes, she said, would be given for guessing the ages of the four stewardesses on the flight and for naming Walt Disney's seven dwarfs.

An unidentified passenger in the rear smoking compartment instead named the stewardesses Sneezy, Grumpy, Sleepy and Dopey, and estimated their combined ages at 208.

His entry was loser of the day.

Try a travel course

Atlas Travel Service of Long Beach and the ABC School District Adult Division will cooperate in a six-week course of money-saving tips for holiday planners starting Sept. 17.

Savings start with the 50-cent registration for the classes from 7 to 9:30 Wednesday evenings in Faye Ross Junior High School, Artesia.

Instructor for the course will be Carol Beebe, who will emphasize economy in arrangements for tours, cruises and other vacations.

Guest speakers will include representatives of airlines and cruise companies. Demonstrations of packing luggage and field trips to visit the cruise ships MS Fairsea and Island Princess in Los Angeles Harbor are also included.

from Long Beach... How far must you drive, to fly to Las Vegas?

Silly, isn't it? If you drive from Long Beach to either Los Angeles International or Orange County airports, you could spend as much time on the road as you do in the air to get to Las Vegas... not to mention the inconvenience and expense! Why not fly Scenic? It's the only scheduled airline serving Las Vegas... twice daily... from the Long Beach airport.

Potpourri of information for travelers

San Francisco

How to be coy without really trying: "When I married (each of us for the second time) I reduced my age 10 years. So I was terrified when the passport people said my true birthdate would appear on the passport," writes a woman reader.

They suggested I take out a joint passport with my husband. Only HIS birthdate appears in that case. We each had to fill out applications. But I just had him sign his in blank form and I filled out both of them. That's as close as I ever want to have!

"I need a new passport — mine's expired — but meantime I've misplaced my birth certificate..."

Your expired passport is all you need to prove your birth.

"I'd like to give a friend a traveling case that carries passport, tickets, money etc."

Mark Cross in New York and San Francisco has these. Probably any luggage shop has them. I'm against those all-eggs-in-one-basket cases. If you lose it, you've lost everything.

Nice passport cases are sold by Loewe, the Spanish leather shop on the Gran Via in Madrid. All leather in many colors. United States seal stamped on them in color.

"We will be in Europe for two weeks this winter. We like a hearty American breakfast and I hear they only serve rolls and coffee..."

On the continent, that's what they do. They WILL serve bacon and eggs but they look on it as equivalent to an evening dinner and charge accordingly. Like $10.

But be of good cheer, if you go to a Hilton hotel you'll find a coffee shop with everything. Even the toast is warm.

In England, Scotland and Ireland breakfast is a serious meal. Also it's free — bed and breakfast go together.

Breakfast offers you bacon and eggs, hot cereal and kippers, marmalade and toast. (The toast will be cold. But you can't win them all.)

"How about the beard, long hair and guitar in Europe?"

European countries have accepted the shaggy routine. Reluctantly, but there's so many of them, the money is important.

You may get a heavier search as you cross borders. And U.S. Customs surely will prod your baggage thoroughly.

Mexico is death on long hair. They just don't let you in.

"Is Shannon Airport the best place to buy by mail order?"

They're fastest and most reliable. You need a month or more cushion for anything shipped by sea travel

mail. If you order for Christmas, send it in by the end of September.

Shannon's new catalogue is out. They ask you to send 75 cents U.S.

How much time should we allow to ship things home for Christmas from Mexico?"

Anything from a week to forever. I NEVER ship anything from Mexico.

Sometimes it's worked. But mostly I didn't get it and could get no answer from the place where I bought it. Anything you can't carry home, forget it.

"Does film cost more in Europe? How much can you take in?"

It does cost more. Each country has an official limit, but in practice Customs doesn't ask you how much you have.

And if they're looking at your luggage (most countries don't) they don't seem to mind how much you have.

Same goes for cigarettes. European customs used to watch for the legal limit on cigarettes. Now they don't even ask how many you're carrying.

Don't let this easy-going attitude fool you into carrying contraband like narcotics.

While waiting in line for Customs in London, I popped over to the men's room. Immediately a chap in plain clothes jumped out of nowhere and followed me in. He was The Man and it stood out all over him.

'Controversial' exhibits

These hot heads in Boston will get us all involved before this thing is over," predicted a delegate to the Virginia Convention discussing England's repressive measures more than 200 years ago.

The same can be said today of Boston's activities stirring up fervor over the U.S. celebration of the Bicentennial of the American Revolution.

Although their meetings are not as clandestine as in the Adams-Hancock-Franklin days, they refuse to soft-pedal controversial issues such as busing and women's lib — that a dowager city like Boston would like to hush up when so much company is coming.

But Boston has always thrived on controversy. American Airlines, which offers frequent service between Boston and scores of U.S. cities, reports these controversies are the main feature of many Bicentennial exhibits now on display for visitors.

FOR INSTANCE, at the Bunker Hill Pavilion on Hoosac Pier in the Charlestown section of the city several viewpoints are woven into a multi-media, dramatic reenactment of the Battle of Bunker Hill. Called "Whites of Their Eyes" the story is told in part by direct quotations from people who were at the battle. The principal themes are presented by a Colonial volunteer and a British officer.

"Those Valiant Upstarts" at the Museum of Fine Arts in the Back Bay area dramatizes in detail many confrontations of Boston's revolutionary history. Diorama sequences provided by the Military Collectors of New England recreate 17 scenes, from the Boston Massacre and the Boston Tea Party to American troops entering Boston.

At the Fog Art Museum in Cambridge little known controversies surrounding Franklin and Lafayette will be exhibited this year. Being prepared for next year's display called "Harvard Divided" are exhibits that explore the dynamics and effects of patriot and loyalist sentiments in 1776 Cambridge.

Controversial religious leaders are featured in a Bicentennial exhibit in the Skywalk on the 50th floor of the Prudential Tower. Some of these important leaders include John Winthrop, Anne Hutchinson, Cotton Mather, William Ellery Channing, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Theodore Parker, Rabbi Solomon Schindler, Mary Baker Eddy, and Richard Cardinal Cushing.

The exhibit examines the issues and controversies from the challenges to the Puritan order in early Boston to the involvement of religion in the social issues of the present day.

This Fall TWA puts London on sale.

From $440

Apex Fare.

If you didn't think you could afford London this Fall, you're going to think twice when you hear about TWA's incredible Apex fare. Because it saves you a whopping 52% over regular round-trip economy fare.

In October, you can fly round trip for just $459. In November and December, it's even lower, $440.

Naturally there are a few conditions. You must stay at least 22 days and no more than 45, and space is limited. (And there's a $15 surcharge each way if you travel Friday, Saturday or Sunday.)

And no later than 2 months before departure, everything must be wrapped up: your round-trip reservations and complete payment.

If you have to make any change in name, routing, flight or departure date — or if you cancel or fail to use your ticket — all but $50 or 10% of the fare, whichever is higher, will be refunded.

Should a change in plans occur during the trip, where the return portion of the Apex ticket cannot be used, an additional payment will be required for the new ticket.

From $581

One Week Theatre Spectacular.

If you can't afford to spend much time in London this Fall, TWA has a terrific way you can spend just one week. On our money-saving theatre tours.

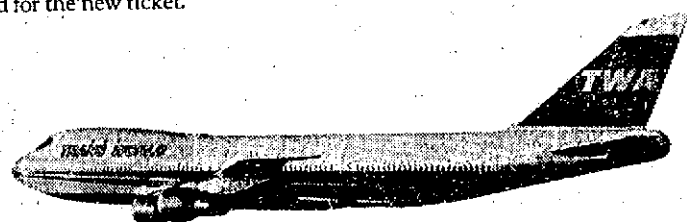

Starting September 21, the prices range from $581 to $831. And just listen to what this includes: round-trip airfare, hotel and continental breakfast daily. Sightseeing. And, of course, tickets to great London theatre. (You see the top Broadway imports before Broadway does.)

Now, a word or two about these tour prices. They depend on when you go and where you stay, and are per person based on double occupancy. They do not include the $3.00 International Departure Tax.

There are certain restrictions on these packages, such as advance purchase, and you'll find all the details in our splendid new brochure, "Getaway Europe."

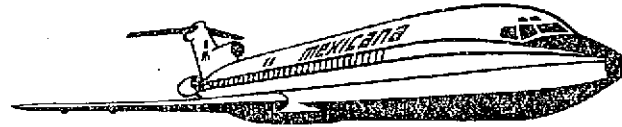

And you'll find the brochure with your Travel Agent. So pay a visit soon.

After all, isn't it your turn to see the leaves turn in Europe?

Mexico now. The sun is up. The price is down.

Fall is a perfect time to see Mexico. It's sunny. (Pleasantly warm, not hot.) It's less crowded. And it's an even bigger bargain than usual. The 15% food and beverage tax is out. New low air fares for individual travelers are in. And so are "off-season" rates at many hotels.

From Los Angeles, Mexicana has more daily flights and more non-stops to Mexico than any other airline — including Mexico City non-stops with complimentary champagne and a choice of entree.

On December 15 high season rates begin. So see your travel agent or call Mexicana today. And see Mexico this fall, while the sun is up and the price is down.

CHEF OF THE WEEK

Kitchen duty comes after dental chores

Today's chef of the week, Herman H. Reece, D.D.S., thoroughly enjoys both his vocation as a dentist and his avocation as a "cook."

Born in Indianapolis, Ind., Reece was the youngest in a family of seven boys and one girl. At the age of 5, he was adopted by an aunt and uncle. He completed both elementary and high school in Indianapolis. Extracurricular activities included Boy

mildred flanary

Scouts of America and he attained Eagle Scout rank, amassing 96 merit badges along the way. He played trumpet in the Boy Scout band and taught swimming and life saving at scout camp for eight summers.

Then the urge for a change of scenery overtook him and he came to California, enrolling at USC. He was graduated in 1946 from USC Dental School where he pledged Sigma Delta Dental fraternity and was serving as its president when he graduated.

The U.S. Navy was next on his agenda, and his first duty was at Long Beach Navy Hospital. He then served with the Fleet Marines, based in China. Much of this period in his life he will never forget. He was a part of that area before, and just after, it became Communist China.

Following discharge, he returned to California and began his dental practice in Compton. He remained there 20 years before relocating in Long Beach in 1969.

REECE SERVED as president of Compton Rotary Club and boast 25 years of perfect attendance. Chairman of the Midland District Boy Scouts, he served as a member of the board for several years. He also was scoutmaster for the Salvation Army sponsored troop.

A member of Anchor Lodge, El Bekal Shrine and Elks Lodge 1570, Reece also is a member of the board of Harbor District Dental Society.

He and his wife, Nancy, formerly of Fairbough, Minn., have three children. Kim Marie attends Long

HERMAN H. REECE, D.D.S.

Beach City College. Jody Lyn, who just graduated from Polytechnic High School, plans to enter LBSU in the fall. Andy will be a junior at Wilson.

An enthusiastic golfer, Reece teams up every Thursday with a group of "dental bandits," some of whom have played together for 15 years. Nancy, an avid fisherperson, is known to her friends as a fishing magnet. She always catches the big ones. Our chef usually goes along, so many of the family vacations are spent deep sea fishing — mostly for salmon and albacore. Today he has barbecue ribs in tow.

BARBECUED RIBS

Sprinkle 2 pounds spareribs with red pepper, paprika, salt and brown sugar. Place in oven on cookie sheets and bake 1½ hours at 350 degrees. SAUCE FOR BASTING

- Catsup and water, equal parts
- 1 teaspoon Tabasco sauce
- 1/2 cup paprika
- 2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce

If additional liquid is preferred for sweeter ribs, use canned pineapple juice in place of water. After removing ribs from oven, place on barbecue and baste. Turn frequently until golden brown. Serves 4 to 6.

DEAR ABBY

Ache in dentist's wallet

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: A friend who recently moved to this city phoned me early one Sunday morning to say that he was in agony and asked if I knew a dentist who could see him immediately.

I reached my dentist, who agreed to see my friend at once.

Later that day, my friend phoned to thank me and tell me what a marvelous job my dentist had done in putting him out of his misery. (He had had an abscessed tooth which required dental surgery.)

Six months later, my dentist called to tell me that he was sorry but that he was turning my friend's dental bill over to a collection agency because all his bills had been ignored!

I was shocked because my friend is well off financially, and I certainly never took him for a deadbeat.

I am terribly embarrassed and don't know what to do. Should I call my friend and ask him to please pay the dentist? Or should I pay him myself? The bill is $90 for three visits. — IN THE MIDDLE

DEAR IN: You are not responsible for your friend's debts, but since you were the middleman, urge your friend to pay the dentist at once. It might embarrass him into paying up.

DEAR ABBY: My uncle and I have a disagreement. Recently a good friend of mine came home after being in the service for a long time. I was so happy to see him that I hugged him hard.

My uncle saw this and later told me it was "disgusting" for two men to hug each other. He said "real" men do not show any outward affection for another man.

Abby, I consider myself a "real" man, and I still don't see anything wrong with what I did. I am 20 and my friend is 21. Do you think we acted "unmanly"? — DOUBTFUL

DEAR DOUBTFUL: No! A "real" man feels sufficiently sure of his own masculinity to hug another man — and even kiss him if he feels like it, without fear of what others might think.

If you have any doubts, save them for your uncle.

DEAR ABBY: We are totally confused about an incident that occurred at one of our finer restaurants. Our waiter brought the check on a tray in the customary fashion. A few minutes later, the cashier came to our table saying he had to close out his cash drawer, even though we hadn't finished our lunch.

We looked at the check, and it totaled $18.02. We placed two $10 bills and two pennies on the tray, and the cashier picked up the tray and never returned with our change.

We know that 20 per cent is the customary gratuity, and we are wondering if they assumed that the extra two dollars was the tip.

Is that the customary procedure at the better restaurants? We've never run into that before. — PERPLEXED

DEAR PERPLEXED: The waiter should always return the change no matter how much (or little) it is. You were within your rights to ask for your change. A "tip" is not an obligation, and the amount should always be left to the discretion of the diner.

CONFIDENTIAL TO CONCERNED PARENT: You can't tell a child "too much." Knowledge doesn't stimulate inappropriate behavior. IGNORANCE does! If you tell your child more than he can understand, he will either ask you another question or turn you off. Parents should work toward being ASKABLE!

Everyone has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply, write to ABBY: Box No. 69700, Los Angeles, Ca. 90069. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

Former Dodger star whips alcoholism

Newcombe's greatest victory

"It takes people like me to stand up and tell about it rather than hide it—and I did hide it for a number of years. I was ashamed, even after I quit drinking, to tell people that I once was an alcoholic." —Don Newcombe.

When the Dodgers' oldtimers gather once again to dust off their memories next weekend it's unlikely that anyone will offer Don Newcombe a drink.

"It's something I don't feel I need anymore," says Newcombe. "There was a time when I did need it."

The Dodgers' 1975 campaign has driven a lot of people to the bottle, but not Newcombe. He's been there. He's not going back.

"It was a constant syndrome of alcohol in my life," says Newcombe, who dragged his habit through a career as one of baseball's mightiest righthanded pitchers until it all crashed with the tragic tableau of a World Series ring resting in a pawnshop.

NEWCOMBE DOESN'T mind telling his story. That's what he does for a living.

Along with his duties with the Los Angeles Management Council of placing veterans and disadvantaged youths in jobs, he is consultant for the National Clearing House for Alcohol Information and travels around the country spreading the dry word for anybody who will listen.

"I don't preach," Newk says. "I don't tell people they shouldn't drink. That would be foolish. I've got whiskey in my house."

"I just tell 'em a true-to-life story—what it did to me, how it almost ruined my life—and let them draw their own conclusions."

"It takes people like me that can get into newspapers and onto television to stand up and tell about it rather than hide it—and I did hide it for a number of years. I was ashamed, even after I quit, to tell people that I once was an alcoholic."

Oh, there were reasons, Don says. A drunk always has a reason to drink.

"I started when I was a kid, 8 or 9 years old, drinking beer. My father used to make home brew and give it to the kids. My first wife was an alcoholic. I lived with her for 13 years."

The peak of his career was 1956 when Big Newk won 27 games for the Brooklyn Dodgers and became the first winner of the newly created Cy Young Award, the highest honor a pitcher can achieve. But even that glory was drowned in booze.

"I had problems," Don says, "problems created by a couple of newspaper writers who were saying I couldn't win the big ones. I win 27 games but then get knocked out in the World Series and I'm a choke-up artist."

"When I went to schools to speak I had to explain to kids when they asked, 'What does it mean that you choke up?' So what do I do? I crawl into a shell and find my solace in the bottle."

Newcombe insists that "I'd never drink before I pitched, and every second of January, right after New Year's Day, I would stop drinking if I had to go to spring training in February, and I didn't get involved in hard liquor to any degree until after I quit baseball."

But Newcombe doesn't doubt that it shortened his career—"in the later stages, certainly," he says.

He was only 32 when the Dodgers traded him to Cincinnati midway through 1958, their first season in Los Angeles—"on June 14," Don recalls ruefully, "my birthday."

He played 2½ years with the Reds, one in the minors with Spokane and finally the last in Japan before retiring in '62.

That allowed him to devote all of his time to his failing liquor and lounge businesses in New Jersey, which only compounded the problem.

"I thought I had to be a sociable host and drink with everybody else, as well as on my own," he says.

"Before I knew it I was drunk."

"If you've ever gotten drunk, you know the next thing you do, when you wake up, is have something to settle your stomach because you're sick. You try other things like milk, but nothing seems to solve your need except some more alcohol."

WHEN THE BUSINESSES folded in 1966, Newcombe moved to Los Angeles, where he paid a call on his friendly neighborhood pawnbroker.

"I actually pawned my World Series ring and watch," he admits. "The guy knew who I was, but I wasn't ashamed. I needed the money to pay my bills. I was broke. I think he gave me three, four or five hundred dollars, but then I couldn't get 'em out when the pawn came due."

The story leaked out and Peter O'Malley heard about it.

"He went down, got the watch and put it in the vault at Dodger Stadium for me," Newk says. "This is the ring here."

NEWCOMBE LATER went to work with the Dodgers as director of community relations, and it would make a nice, neat ending to fade out here as Don and Peter walk off into the sunset of Chavez Ravine, teetotalers forever.

But the real life drama was more poignant. Newk awoke one day with his usual hangover to see his present wife, Billie, standing at the door with their three children.

"She had promised me before that she was going to leave," Don says, "but something told me this time she was serious. She had her bags packed."

"I finally woke up and said to myself, 'There are the only four things you love in your sober mind, the only things you have left,' and I was losing them because of what I was trying to find in that bottle."

"I told her, 'If I swear to you on the head of that boy, Don Jr., that I will not drink another drop as long as I live, will you believe me?'"

"She laughed. 'This is a new one,' she said. 'You never tried that one on me before. But go ahead.'"

Good old days

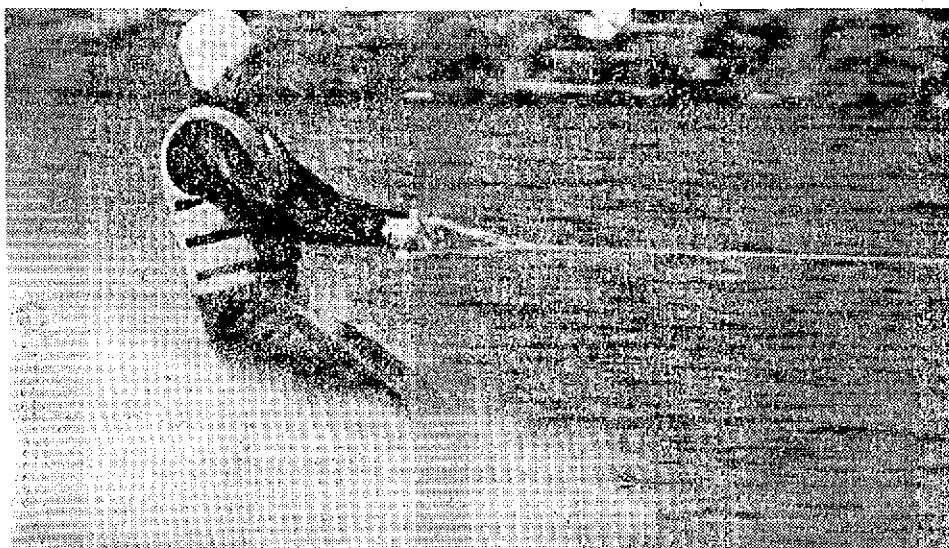

Don Newcombe and Roy Campanella, two of the Dodgers' mainstays during their mid-1950 heydays in Brooklyn, will be reunited Sunday for annual oldtimers game at Dodger Stadium.

"I did. I placed my hand on the boy's head, swore an oath—and I haven't drunk another drop since."

Newcombe does not dig on oldtimers' games "because I see no significance in going all over the country to play five minutes of remembering something."

He has turned down at least four other invitations this season. But he will be at Dodger Stadium next Sunday.

"For Peter O'Malley," he says, studying the ring, "I would do whatever he asked."

CRAIG VESTERMARK...chasing elusive record

Skier saves lives on land —risks his own on water

By GARY RAUSCH
Staff Writer

Craig Vestermarck spoke of his vocation and his avocation—seemingly a paradox.

A paramedic with the Long Beach Fire Dept., Craig spends virtually every spare moment away from Station No. 1 on the water, hurtling along behind a full-blown hydro approaching 100 miles per hour—barefooted!

Vestermarck has two goals at today's International Speed Ski and Barefoot champions (Marine Stadium, noon). One is to regain the barefoot world record. The other is retaining his physical well-being. Fellow paramedics claim he and his mental faculties parted company many years ago.

"It wasn't that long ago," Craig said with a laugh. "Maybe in June when I fell going 93 miles an hour. Another half-second and I would have had the record."

Instead, he settled for a concussion.

VESTERMARK IS a quick-witted, outgoing 30-year-old. His 150-pound frame is lean, about 20 pounds lighter than when he was quarterbacking Long Beach City College a dozen years ago.

"I played behind Jimmy Dunn in 1963 and was penciled in as No. 1 in 1964. That was until the coaches saw Greg Barton throw the football."

Craig reached back in his memory for a moment. "I remember throwing an interception against L.A. Valley and it was just me and the dude running it back. Then it was just the dude."

"Here I was sprawled on my stomach and all I could think of was how wet and cold the grass was."

Years later Vestermarck sought a new challenge and he found it in barefoot water skiing. Man's eternal quest for speed had finally caught him.

"I attended one of the drag boat races in Marine Stadium, saw the boats pulling barefoot skiers and thought I could go as fast as they were going."

Four years and two world records later, Craig is on the brink of breaking the 100-mph barrier. But so are current record-holder Gordon Epling of Australian—Vestermarck's arch-rival, and Mike Plunkett.

Having gone an unofficial 98.84 mph, Vestermarck believes history's first 100-mph run is inevitable.

"It's going to happen this weekend because there are just too many good competitors."

Craig is just as enthused about the conventional skiing portion of the $6,000 program. Danny Churchill's one-ski world record of 126.40 will come under attack from Aussie Paul McManis (unofficial 128) and Bob Davis (128) among others.

Has he ever contemplated competing on one or two skis?

"That's crazy," Craig retorted, sounding like a man asked to tightrope over Niagara Falls. "The fastest I've ever gone on skis was 55 and I was frightened to death."

When mentioning his former world records or any high-speed runs, Vestermarck uses the pronoun "we," referring to himself, his diver Dale Clarke and Dale's $15,000 boat. This is a team sport and there's money to be made.

"Believe me, 80 per cent is the driver and Dale is the finest you'd ever want to find. We've won about $3,000 the past three years and we'd like to add that $1,000 first prize this week."

Asked about his personal investment, Craig replied: "Not one penny. Sea Suits of California sponsors me." If he takes a bad fall today, Drs. Jeff McDonald and Steve Shea will be on the beach to patch him up and six Playboy bunnies will lend moral support.

To date Vestermarck has twice separated his pelvis and suffered a strained knee. Avoiding any major injuries, Craig topped 73 mph for a world standard in 1972, but lost it to Grant Torrance (79) four months later. Epling extended it to 84 in March of 1973.

In the same meet five months later, Vestermarck became the first barefoot skier over 90 mph only to see Epling split the traps at 93.66 for the current mark later in the afternoon.

"Gordon and I have met seven times and the only times he's beaten me were twice when I fell and the day of the record. So far this year we've gone 93 at Bakersfield and 95.04 on a day the wind came up and we couldn't get in a backup run. So essentially we're undefeated the last two years."

Until the advent of duck tape, burns were as common to barefoot skiers as bruises are to football players.

"At 70 miles per hour, it's just a tickling sensation," said the Wilson High graduate. "At 85 or 90 it goes from a tickle to a full-blown, third-degree burn."

Speed skiers take great pride in walking away from violent falls.

"Bob Davis was going over 120 on skis when he went down," said Craig in awe, "and he walked up the beach, shaking hands along the way."

"It all happens so fast," he said of the often crippling falls. "Usually one or both legs get blown off the water. King Neptune just jerks it out, the skier flips, lands on his back and starts spinning."

VESTERMARK CAN vividly describe films of Doug McDonald going end-over-end 10 times. "He just kept smacking it and thrashing the water."

His own worst spill wasn't quite as spectacular.

"If I saw film of it, though, I'd probably never ski again. The first hit was really critical. I landed on my back and went straight into the air."

"When I hit again, I'm in a valve of water. Apparently there was something King Neptune didn't like about me and spit me out again. Now I've created my own wake and when I hit the next time I stop."

"I was expecting to see my ribs sticking out of the wet suit. When you have a fall like that, at least each time you hit you're going that much slower," he said with a knowing wink.

For a fellow whose occupation is saving lives and limbs, Craig Vestermarck goes the limit of destroying his own. King Neptune must like paramedics.

Hank Hollingworth is on vacation.

49er gridgers superior —and so are coaches

By JIM McCORMACK
Staff Writer

Football coaches, claims Wayne Howard, hold high opinions of themselves.

"I don't know of a coach, offhand," admits Howard, "that doesn't think he's about the best one there is."

Some, however, have more statistical support than others.

Howard, for example, has a 16-year credential of 110-45-3, including a 6-5 effort last fall in his first term at Long Beach State.

That was quite a turnaround for the 49ers, who had suffered through a 1-9-1 year in 1973.

Howard is confident the 1975 49ers will be vastly superior to the 1974 edition, from the coaches on down.

"We're way ahead of last year as just plain coaches," Howard declares. "We're going to do a much better coaching job this year than last. There's no question about it."

Why?

"WE'VE PLAYED ON this level of football as coaches for a year," explains Howard, "and we're a little more ready to begin a season. We know our players better and the opposition better. We know what we have to do to win."

"I think all of that will make us more capable as coaches going into the first game."

Howard will convene his troops today to begin preparation Monday for their season opener Saturday, Sept. 6, against Southwest Louisiana at Veterans Stadium.

The 75 athletes, Howard feels, will comprise a team that will be superior "in all respects" to the one that opened the 1974 season at Northern Illinois.

"We have a quality program now, with quality people in it," Howard states. "I think that we've almost reached the level of San Jose and San Diego. From a material standpoint, I think both of those schools still are a little stronger than we are, but we're close to them now."

"It's tough to determine the strength of some of the intersectional teams we play, like Southwest Louisiana, but, in the PCAA, I'd say we're even with Pacific now, and slightly ahead of Fresno and Fullerton."

Howard's goal for three weeks of drills will be a quick-starting football team.

"The teams that we've coached over the years have been notoriously slow starters," admits Howard, "and I wish I knew the reasons why."

THAT MALADY, HOWARD feels, is particularly serious to a Long Beach-based football team.

"I think," says Howard, "at Long Beach the first game is always going to be a super important game because you always have the battle of trying to get people into the stands."

"Attendance is a big factor in determining the success of your program and playing well in the first game is a big factor in determining your attendance for the entire season."

It isn't that Howard teams have fallen on their faces leaving the starting gates, they've just wobbled a little.

"We haven't lost many football games early," says Howard, "but we have not been a good football team, ever, in the first three or four games of the season and I think that's the biggest pressure we face right now."

The strengths of the 49ers coming into camp may offset some of those early-season blues.

"We're a better team than last year in all respects, except that we have to replace (Bob) Dulich at quarterback and get some kind of an offensive threat that will replace the things Tommie Nathan did for us."

"It doesn't have to be a fullback, but our tailbacks will have to do something or our passing game will have to do something to give us that real threat."

HOWARD FEELS THE 49ers have capable replacements in quarterback candidates Joe Paopao, Lloyd Michaelson and freshman Paul McGaffigan, and at fullback in Kise Flatoa.

Flatoa, a transfer from UC Riverside via Long Beach City College, is being moved to fullback from defensive tackle.

"I don't think that there's any doubt that he's the best athlete I've had in 20 years of coaching," says Howard, "so I'm not concerned about him making the transition. He has the ability, there's no question, so it's up to us as coaches to teach him the things he has to do."

Ready for opener

Long Beach State football coach Wayne Howard says his 49ers have superior talent than last year and that he and his coaching staff are better, too. Forty-niners open season Sept. 6 at Veterans Stadium against Southwest Louisiana.

Paopao is a junior college transfer and Michaelson is a letterman who played very little last fall and then missed spring practice because of baseball.

"But I'm not really concerned about them, either," declares Howard. "They both have major league arms, and they're both willing to do whatever it takes to win. Again, it's up to us as coaches to teach them those things."

If Howard and his staff are as good as they think they are, that should be no problem.

GIRL CAPTURES SOAP BOX DERBY

AKRON, Ohio (UPI)—Karen Stead, an 11-year-old from Morrisville, Pa., Saturday became the first girl ever to win the All-America Soap Box Derby with a 27.52 photo-finish victory over third-place Damon Papuga of Boston.

The 4-11, 94-pound winner, in her first year of racing, crossed the finish line inches ahead of Papuga in the championship heat to win a $3,000 college scholarship, a trophy and 10-speed bicycle.

Lloyd (Frank) Watson of Salem, Ore., finished second and got a $2,000 grant. Papuga received a $1,000 scholarship.

Kimberly Watts of Kanawha Valley, W. Va., came in fourth, Kathy Lewis of Elk Grove, Calif., fifth, Shelly Brower of Conejo Valley, Calif., sixth, Troy Jonas of Fort Worth, Tex., seventh, Kristine Oosting of Grand Rapids, Mich., eighth and Stephen Beville of Washington, D.C., ninth.

All three championship heats were decided in photo finishes.

Washam Bies, winless in lead by two in nine years, nabs shot lead

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Little-known JoAnn Washam of Fort Worth, Tex. fired her second successive 69 Saturday to grab a two-stroke lead in the $45,000 Patty Berg Classic.

Miss Washam's 138 gives her a two-stroke lead over defending champion JoAnne Carner, Donna Caponi Young, Sandra Palmer and Carol Mann heading into Sunday's final 18 holes of the 64-hole Ladies Professional Golf Association (LPGA) tournament at Keller Golf Course.

The petite 25-year-old Texan, who trailed first-round co-leaders Betty Burfeindt and Mrs. Carner by one stroke, turned the front nine in 34 and suffered only one bogey when she three-putted on No. 10.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Carner managed a one-under 72 during a spotty round, which she followed an eagle on No. 1 with a double-bogey.

Mrs. Young, who won the European Open last weekend, and Ms. Palmer charged into contention with four-under par 69s.

Canadian Jocelyn Bourassa shook of a one-hour morning rain delay and fired the day's best round with a 68 to join Judy Kimball and Joyce Kazmierski, who also had a secondround 69, in the tightly-bunched field at 141.

Miss Washam, who had not recorded successive rounds in the 60s prior to this weekend during her pro career, is looking for her first four victory in three seasons. She took the lead into the final round at Medina, Ohio, June 15, but faltered with an 80 on the last day.

WETHERSFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Veteran Don Bies, gunning for his first victory in nine years on the tour, pulled into the lead, but six players moved into contention Saturday after the third round of the Greater Hartford Open Golf Tournament.

Bies, 37, winner of $305,377 but never a title, entered the day's play tied with Hubert Green but moved in gained the lead with a four-under-par 67 in cool, cloudy, sometimes drizzly weather.

That gave Bies a 54-hole total of 188, 15-under-par over the 6,598-yard Wethersfield Country Club course and a one-stroke advantage entering today's final round.

Green, whose wife Judi is expecting their first child, rolled in birdie putts of 40 and 18 feet on the last two holes to stay within a stroke at 199. He had a 68.

"Finishing with two birdies has to charge him up," Bies said. "He'll be tough."

Five others were within four strokes of the leader, even though Bies' three-round total has been bettered only once this season.

Festival golf to Argentinian

FULFORD, England (AP) — Vicente Fernandez of Argentina birdied the final hole and won the $8,800 Festival golf tournament at Fulford Saturday, beating Maurice Bembridge of Britain by one stroke.

Fernandez had a 72-266, eight-under-par, and Bembridge finished with a 71-267.

In third with a 69-269 was Bruce Fleisher of Miami. Another American pro, Doug Sanders, was tied for fifth at 74-273 with Mustafa Moussa of Egypt.

Nelson matched 67s and were at 201.

Andy North, Vic Regalado and Al Geiberger were grouped at 202. North had a 67, Regalado 65 and Geiberger recorded the best round of the day, a seven-under-par 64. He chipped in for an eagle and had 10 "3's" on his card.

David Glenz and Terry Dill were at 203. Glenz had a 66, Dill 67.

"I got kind of disgusted out there," admitted Green, who missed a number of relatively short putts on the first 14 holes. "I had a chance to make it a two-man race. But I have no excuses. If I was supposed to have shot a really good round, I'd have done it."

Teen wins U.S. Amateur golf

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Beth Daniel, a Furman University sophomore from Charleston, S.C., won the 75th U.S. Women's Amateur golf championship Saturday with a 3 and 2 pressure-packed victory over Donna Horton of Jacksonville, Fla.

Miss Daniel, 18, who packs amazing power on a slender 5-foot-10 frame, took a 2-up lead in the morning round and then came back strong as Miss Horton, 21, encountered trouble on the back nine in the scheduled 36-hole final at Brae Burn Country Club.

Miss Horton pulled even on the 28th hole with a birdie-four, halved the next two holes and then wilted.

Miss Daniel regained the lead with a par-five on the 31st hole and went 2-up with a par-five on the 32nd. After halving the 33rd hole, Miss Daniel closed out the match with a birdie-three on the 34th hole.

Miss Daniel, who was two down after nine holes, rallied in the morning round to go in front.

Miss Horton made a strong comeback in the afternoon round, squaring the match on the 26th hole. She lost the 27th to a birdie by Miss Daniel but came back to win the 28th with a birdie.

"I was all puffed up after making a good putt on the 12th hole (30th), but then I put my drive out of bounds on the next hole," Miss Horton said.

Miss Daniel capitalized on her rival's erratic drive on the 30th hole. Then she took the next as Miss Horton had "a terrible lie" and was unable to chip out from rough on a bank.

Nitehawks' bid to ISC tourney draws criticism

The unexpected bid given to the Long Beach Nitehawks to play in next week's International Softball Congress national tournament in Kimberly, Wis., has come under heavy fire.

An official of the Lakewood Stevenson-Forster Jets, and a member of that team who is the organizer of the Western Softball Congress players association, have lodged a complaint with the league president that the Nitehawks did not deserve the invitation.

The bid was tendered to the Nitehawks because they are scheduled to be the host team for the nationals in Long Beach in 1976. This will be the third year in a row the Hawks have gone to the nationals without qualifying in the conventional manner.

"It's ridiculous," says Lanny Rupp, whose Lakewood Jets' team finished second to Santa Ana in the WSC and is presently trying to win a national bid through the state ISC tournament.

Al Unser captures 100-miler

Combined News Services

Veteran driver Al Unser won the 100-mile Tony Bettenhausen Memorial dirt-track race Saturday at the Illinois State Fair.

Unser, of Albuquerque, N.M., made his move on the 62nd lap, squeezing past leader Jackie Howerton on the first turn and gradually building his lead.

RACE ROUNDUP

to 10 seconds at the checkered flag. He averaged 89.989 mph around the one-mile oval.

Howerton, Tulsa, Okla., finished third behind Unser and Jimmy Caruthers of Anaheim. Fourth-place went to Bill Engelhart of Madison, Wis.

Johnny Rutherford won the pole position for today's Tony Bettenhausen 200-mile classic at Milwaukee and A.J. Foyt was second.

Rutherford's speed was 129.496 mph and Foyt was clocked at 128.526 mph. Gordon Johncock and Wally Dallenbach earned second-row positions.

World driving leader Niki Lauda of Austria, in a 12-cylinder Ferrari, won the Austrian Grand Prix pole position for today's Formula 1 race with a lap run of 1:34.85 for the Formula One race.

James Hunt of Britain drove a Hesketh to a 1:31.97 time and world champion Emerson Fittipaldi of Brazil, in a McLaren, had the third fastest time in the field at 1:35.21.

Pole sitter Dave Marcis blew the engine of his Dodge in practice Saturday for today's running of the Talladega Grand National stock car race.

Jets post 2-0 victory

Darwin Tolzin hurled a one-hitter and Hice Stiles and Bob Aguilar slugged home runs Saturday night as the Lakewood Stevenson-Forster Jets whipped Mission Viejo, 2-0, in the ISC state tournament at Joe Rodgers Field.

The Jets are the only unbeaten team left in the double-elimination tournament and play tonight at 7:30 against either the Lakewood Barons or Mission Viejo, which tangled at 6.

Lakers-Blazers win summer cage

Mack Calvin scored 29 points and Dan Anderson added 20 to lead the Lakers-Trail Blazers to a 132-120 victory over the Bucks-Colonels and the championship of the Summer Pro Basketball League at L.A. State Saturday night.

The Phoenix Suns beat the NBA Stars, 169-138, in the consolation game.

Wajima romps in Travers

Combined News Services

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y.—Wajima, a $600,000 gamble, turned that bet into a winning one Saturday with a smashing 10 1/4-length victory in the 106th running of the Travers Stakes.

"I hit him once, straightening out at the quarter pole to make sure he changed his lead and then hand rode him," jockey Braulio Baeza said. "He had plenty for me in the stretch."

The $65,220 winner's share of the $108,700 purse increased Wajima's career earnings to $260,808, but, more importantly, guaranteed his East-West Stable owners a dividend on their $600,000 yearling purchase price.

As a member of Bold Ruler's last crop, out of Iskara, Wajima's victory in the 14-mile Travers assured a demand for his services as a stallion.

The 45 favorite of the Saratoga record crowd of 32,344, Wajima paid $3.50, $2.80 and $2.10. His time of 2:02 was only one second off the stakes record set by Loud in 1970.

Media finished a distant second, while Prince Thou Art failed to provide his expected challenge and was third. Media paid $1.20 and $2.40 while Prince Thou Art returned $2.20.

Sharon Stable's Force ten, the morning-line favorite after Kentucky Derby winner Foolish Pleasure was withdrawn, also was scratched, because of a swelling in his right rear leg.

Prince Thou Art's jockey, Marco Castaneda, said "I asked my horse to run about the three-eighths pole, but he couldn't catch Wajima. The pace was too slow for a closing horse like Prince Thou Art."

The half mile was run in :48 3/4, with Wajima running second, and the Bold Ruler colt was starting to pull away from the abbreviated five-horse field as he passed the mile mark in 1:37.

MONMOUTH—Royal Gint ($17,600) captured the $100,150 Amory L. Haskell Handicap by eight lengths, leading from wire to wire in the 1 1/4-mile race on a muddy track. Substitute jockey Craig Perret rode the winner, who clocked 2:00 1/2. Proper Bostonian was second, Stonewalk third and 5-favorite Group Plan fourth in the field of six, cut from 10 with four late scratches because of the "off" track.

N.Y. FAIRGROUNDS—The Stanley Dancer-trained entry ($2,600) of Bonefish and Surefire Hammer finished third in the $111,000 Empire State Trot. Dancer guided the winner in the mile trot to a 2 1/4-length win over his stablemate, driven by Dancer's 25-year-old son Ronald.

Johnson Soil wins

Johnson Soil defeated South San Francisco, 9-4, Saturday night at Blair Field in the first game of the annual series between the teams. The victory gives Johnson a one-game lead in the series with a second game at 6 tonight.

LBSU women to receive money grants

BY ELAINE RISINGER
Staff Writer

Financial assistance will be available for the first time this fall to athletes participating in women's and coed intercollegiate sports at Long Beach State. The minimum grant would cover a student's fee for one academic year, or about $200.

At present, money for 37 grants-in-aid have been allocated from Associated Student funds. However, only $4,400 will be used this year.

"According to a policy set up in our coaches' council, each of our 11 sports will get a base amount that's equal," says Fran Schaafsma, director of the program.

"The amount should be equivalent to two tuition fees," Fran goes on. "But what I try to avoid is talking in dollars. You can't equate, say USC dollars, with Long Beach State's dollars. They aren't equal. When they say they are giving a student a full-fee grant, they are talking about three to four thousand dollars. Our $200 matches in terms of what it means."

The selection of recipients will be based on talent, according to Dr. Schaafsma. If talent is equal, then need will be considered. If a sport does not have players with the talent needed to qualify for a grant, then money will be put back in the central fund to be used by other sports.

Dr. Schaafsma's recommendations on who is to receive a grant will be given to a committee appointed by the dean of students. It reviews each applicant and makes the final approval.

Grants will be for one year, but Fran feels that in fairness to students, an athlete awarded a grant should be able to depend on that money as long as she is eligible to compete, fulfills her obligations and maintains her skill at a level to warrant it.

"There are some long-range implications to this," Dr. Schaafsma says. "I think we're going to look to a fund-raising event to support our program." The director also is hopeful that the Associated Students will possibly increase funding.

The many letters Fran receives are indicative of the increased interest by young women in athletic scholarships.

"Many letters I've received were really a hard-sell program on their talents, with resumes, dittoed letters—saying 'I want a scholarship, what can you offer me?' I reply that until our budget is firm we can't make a commitment."

"All of the scholarships this year will be given on the basis of who is in school already. Springs sports have the possibility of using the student grant as a recruitment device as long as the student meets AIAA eligibility standards."

A departmental policy prohibits recruiting of high school athletes, but Dr. Schaafsma would like this changed. She vows the recruiting will not be the high-pressure type.

"We don't intend upon hounding the girls to death," she concludes.

Soccer jubilee kicks off today

A five-week international soccer jubilee, bringing together teams representing eight nationalities, will kick off today at Daniels Field in San Pedro.

The United Yugoslavs face the Italians at 2 p.m. and Santa Fe, Mexico, meets Costa Rica at 4 in the opening doubleheader. The semis are slated Sept. 14, the finals Sept. 21.

MORE ROWING news from England: Claudia Schneider of Palos Verdes, a recent LBSU graduate, is a member of the U.S. women's national team of eight, coached by Harry Parker.

The team is preparing for the world championships scheduled to begin Thursday in Nottingham. The U.S. team recently won the Canadian Henley Championships.

New sportfishing survey under way

There's a new type of sportfishing under way at launching ramps along the Southern California coast from Santa Barbara County to the Mexican border. The Department of Fish and Game wants to know how many fishing trips are made from each launching area, the time spent fishing, whether fishing was done with hook and line or by diving, the kinds of fish caught and their sizes.

While this program was not initiated for the purpose of checking licenses, it's almost a certainty that DFG wardens and biologists making the survey might like to know how many boat owners and their friends go out in private craft without the benefit of fishing licenses.

So, if you are a private boater who uses the launching ramps in Santa Barbara, Ventura, Los Angeles, Orange and San Diego Counties, don't be surprised to meet a DFG man who might ask questions.

Mainly, the survey is to provide the department with information for the Marine Resources Region to use in future decisions on managing Southland ocean sportfishing species. Biologist Terry Hoban is in charge of the survey. He says that this new program is an expansion of a similar effort conducted in Orange County in 1973 and 1974.

That Orange County survey provided information from a variety of areas—fishing piers, beaches and marinas.

HOBAN SAYS THAT THIS survey will be concentrated on public boat-launching areas. There are 24 that are widely used and, no doubt, there are some others that are smaller and receive little use. Hoban says that this year's surveys, already under way, will be followed by inspections of marinas next year, sandy beaches in 1977 and rocky beaches and shoreline areas in 1978.

It's no fly-by-night idea and the DFG hopes to gain much information about ocean fishing. The department biologists and wardens have had no trouble in gaining all kinds of information from the large party boats, but seldom, if ever, has a private owner been stopped for the kind of information that the DFG wants.

In addition to interviewing sportfishermen using public launching ramps, the DFG is conducting a three-month survey this year of ocean anglers who keep their boats in private marinas in Los Angeles and Orange Counties to get preliminary information before next year's full-scale marina survey.

You may have noted in a recent column that the U. S. Coast Guard announced that 72.8 percent of all private boats were used primarily for fishing. The Coast Guard's figures were for boats using the ocean and fresh-water areas.

It is doubtful that such a percentage would hold true for the ocean boats in Long Beach, inasmuch as many of those are strictly sailboats and many are used only for racing and family cruising.

THERE ARE SEVERAL CONTACTS that I have in San Diego to keep tab on ocean fishing, particularly the party boats that are on the prowl for albacore at this time of the year. One of my best is Eddie McEwen, skipper of the Pacific Queen, which operates out of Fisherman's Landing. One reason is that Eddie and I have been friends for many years, and he is one of the most honest persons I've ever known.

Trying to reach Eddie nowadays when the Queen is on 22-hour runs is like trying to talk to somebody in Hawaii on the citizens' band radio. Occasionally, I call his home and talk to his wife, Nina, who normally is very helpful with fish counts and tips on stories.

I tried that the other day and Nina told me: "All I know is that the fish are about 60 miles from Point Loma. I don't get a chance to talk to Eddie once a month now that the albacore are running. About the only time that we see each other is when I take supplies to the boat or when he reaches that point where he is climbing the walls and has to hire a relief skipper for a day."

"He did tell me the other night that the albacore and bluefin are so mixed that one never knows what fish is hooked until it's gaffed and hoisted to the deck. I also know that the general boat average for all those in the San Diego fleet is 50 to 60 albacore a day."

ONE OF THE NEW PUBLICATIONS now for sale is "Lewis and Clark." There have been numerous books and studies about the Lewis and Clark Expedition in 1804-06, but this volume fills a need of present-day historians to know the complete story of the episode that was one of the most significant in U. S. history.

Not only does the book give the background of the Lewis and Clark Expedition, but its second section is devoted to a survey of the historic sites and buildings, which the National Park Service preserved for posterity. That is, the ones that have not been destroyed by the advances of civilization.

The book is well illustrated with drawings, maps and many photographs of the main areas traversed by the explorers. Roy E. Appleman prepared the book for the NPS, with an assist from Richard E. Morris and Gary Gore.

It represents months and months of effort on the part of the NPS staff in compiling reports from many sources.

The opening color page is a reproduction of Charles M. Russell's painting, "Captain Lewis Meeting the Shoshonis," one of the most dramatic moments of the Expedition, which might have failed without the help of those Indians.

The book may be purchased from the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C., 20402 for $8.35.

Relay record eclipsed

The Aquarius Swim Club of Woodland Hills bettered their own age-group 400-meter freestyle relay mark Saturday with a 3:56.12 clocking in the Junior Olympics swim meet at Belmont Plaza Olympic Pool.

The team held the previous Southern Pacific Association AAU record of 3:57.5.

The Aquarius relay team shattered the national 880-meter freestyle record for boys in the 13-14 age group Friday night in 8:30.46. The old mark was 8:33.02.

Corinne Calhoun of El Monte and Scott Matsuda of Anaheim each recorded their second and third victories in two days of competition. Miss Calhoun won the 200 backstroke and 200 butterfly while TELEVISION LOG OF THE INDEPENDENT PRESS-TELEGRAM AND THE EVENING NEWS

Behind the scenes with comedy writers for 'Good Times'

By JUDI MASON
Staff Writer

When you come from a small town like Bossier City, La., your idea of Hollywood is razzle, dazzle stars.

You expect to see Barbra Streisand or Cicely Tyson in the supermarket buying caviar while you nose out a cheap chicken.

There's a thumpity-thump fear in the pit of your stomach because you're certain that your southern cultured heart will be ripped out by the cold fingers of Hollywood.

That might be true elsewhere in Hollywood, but at Tandem Productions, things aren't that way at all.

Last April, I was the recipient of the Norman Lear Award for Achievement in Comedy Playwriting.

I had written a full-length play and entered it in the America College Theatre Festival.

Something in the script must have struck the fancy of Norman Lear, producer of "All in the Family," "The Jeffersons," and "Good Times." I then received an assignment to write a teleplay for "Good Times," getting $2,500 for the completed teleplay, becoming a member of the Writers Guild of America and sitting down with some of the most prolific comedy writers in America, Norman Lear and his producer, Allan Manings.

It was all a dream. I was meeting Norman Lear. I would be scribbling lines of laughter for one of the most popular shows on the tube.

All the way from Grambling State University, 20 years old, green and scared to death.

The first meeting I was 30 minutes late. As I raced down Vermont Avenue in search of Sunset Boulevard where the CBS studio is located, I kept thinking, I'm making the producer wait.

From what I'd heard, that was the first mistake when dealing with "the big folks." Never be late... and I was.

As I walked into the carpeted offices, I uttered feeble apologies to Lear and Manings.

"I just got into this city," I said, "and that freeway is nothing to play with."

Lear smiled. Manings said, "I've never had a 3:30 appointment at 4:15 before."

The next few minutes, as in the times to follow, I was amid businessmen. I had no idea how much time, seriousness and concentrated effort it takes to write a script for a television show. I thought all I had to do was think up some funny lines about J.J. and Florida and poof! It's finished.

Allan Manings, the executive producer of the show, possesses a delicate quality about teaching. Besides being a sharp-tongued wit, he's warm and understanding. He had to be understanding because the trash that I brought to him the first few times would have made a patient man scream.

Once I remember he read one of my weak offerings and politely told me, "Sweetheart, it's not dramatic enough."

Drama for a comedy show? Then I realized the people who write the scripts don't have laughter in mind when they write. The stuff that makes up "Good Times" is heavy. Teenage pregnancy. Alcohol. Handicaps. Social problems that need attention. Things that people are afraid to talk about that is the soul of "Good Times."

The first two or three sessions dealt mostly with coming up with a workable story idea.

We tossed around a few ideas. When I'd finally come up with something, he made things more difficult for me by asking deep-seated questions like, how would it effect the characters? Could we get enough dramatic action? Is it believable? Why is it funny? What method was used to make it laughable?

"Will I ever get it right?" I was getting discouraged and feeling dumb.

"Oh, sure, it takes time. If I could write a script in 10 minutes, I'd feel weird."

A few weeks later, taping for the fall season began and he arranged for me to see it. Maybe this would ignite the firecracker for me. I would meet the stars of the show. Esther Rolle, John Amos and J. J. would be as close to me as I was to my typewriter.

I waited for the show to begin. Allan came out in his usual jeans and Elton John-type glasses. He warmed up the audience with a few jokes and explained that we were the second group to view this taping.

Two tapings are made of each show and the best audience responses of the two are used.

I met tall and massive John Amos. When we were first introduced, it was in his dressing room just after the taping.

He was drinking coffee when we walked in. "Sit down," he said. "You're the one I was supposed to meet when I was in Grambling a few months ago. How's it going?"

"Okay, I guess..." How do you talk to John Amos?

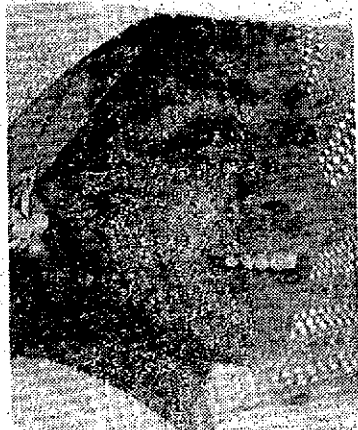

"You must be a fantastic girl. I'm proud of you." He was proud of me?

Down the hall, as I was leaving, Esther Rolle, who plays Florida, the star of the show, was talking to Ralph Carter, the 13-year-old who plays Micheal.

Ralph was jumping around, sort of skipping across the floor. Esther had a smile on her face and was mothering Ralph.

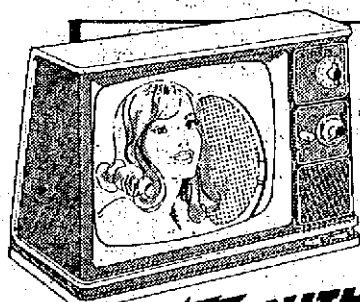

While on the set, she was constantly fixing someone's collar or smiling out at the audience. Friendly and motherly.

Norman is a perfectionist, one of the staff members told me, he thinks every show can be better.

BLENDING MUSIC AND COMEDY, "Tony Orlando and Dawn," featuring Anthony Orlando Cassivitis, half Greek, half Puerto Rican, and Dawn — Joyce Vincent Wilson (top) and Telma Hopkins, two former Motown background singers — have graduated from a summer replacement series to the regular season on CBS-TV Ch. 2 in the prime time 8 p.m. slot on Wednesdays.

Networks premiere new season shows

If the present trend continues we may soon find the fall network TV seasons beginning sooner than you think.

Each of the networks will premier certain new shows prior to the start of the regular season the week of Sept. 8. CBS will outdo the others by showing three episodes of the Sheldon Leonard show, "Big Eddie," prior to its official opening.

The first "Big Eddie" will be presented on Aug. 23, at 8:30 and at the same time the next two weeks. After that it moves into its regular time slot at 8 on Friday nights.

This led variety, the show biz paper, to observe that "Big Eddie" could be the first show ever canceled before it begins.

6 Ways We Save You Money!!

1. INVESTMENT—No doubt about it, a room addition is one of the best investments you can make. What else can you buy and the longer you use it the more valuable it becomes.
2. DESIGN SERVICE—I don't care how much you spend on an addition, if the design is poor you can't get the enjoyment you deserve and you will only get a fraction of what you paid for it. At the Alamo we design the room for function, beauty, furniture arrangements and resale value.
3. FURNISHINGS—When you build any addition you are going to need some new furnishings. Alamo is the only contractor to have a complete line of furniture in stock for your selection. Alamo's room addition customers also receive our special "Customer Card" allowing them a full 25% discount on any furniture we have in the store. You may use this card for purchases for other rooms in your home. This service alone will save you hundreds of dollars.
4. NOT TOO BIG — NOT TOO SMALL—Let's assume you want a family room large enough for a sofa, a pair of chairs, a TV set, and a game table. If you buy a room too large you have wasted several hundred dollars. If, on the other hand, you build it too small you no longer can use it for what you had intended. Probably have to give up your game table which was very important to you. Alamo specializes in designing exactly what you need.
5. VOLUME BUYING—Alamo Center is one of the largest remodelers in the country. We don't have to buy in small lots for one customer at a time, we can order in large quantities, obtaining savings that are passed on directly to you.
6. UNFINISHED JOBS—Yes, Alamo will build the shell and leave the inside work for you if you wish. This will save you many hundreds of dollars. In addition, we will sell you all the finish materials you need at "Contractors cost" thereby giving you extra savings.

Sears Roebuck Armstrong Solarian

Solarian from Armstrong the sunny floor that shines without waxing

Solarian's high shine comes from its Mirabond™ wear surface, a special formulation that will retain its gloss — without waxing — far longer than any ordinary vinyl floor. It's also easier to keep clean. Spills, tracked-in dirt — even black heel marks — come up easily.

Approx. $189 for a 9x12 Room Installed.

SMOKE SALE AT BETTER HOMES

OUR GIGANTIC INVENTORY MUST BE SOLD NOW!

Early Tuesday morning a near disaster was prevented by the Long Beach Fire Dept. Due to the spontaneous reaction of Allied Insurance and Aerscopic Engineers, most of the smoke damage has dissipated. However, we are slashing all prices to dispose of the tremendous stock that was subjected to this near disaster. Seeing is believing! Savings you will think impossible on our quality home furnishings from the nation's leading manufacturers. Prices slashed in all departments: living room, bedroom, dining room, accessories, wall decor, etc. Quantities are limited. Be your own salesman, write your own sales order, as we have kept all expenses of this sale to a minimum in order to give you that extra discount!

The BIBLE Says

J. T. Smith

QUESTION: Is it possible for a child of God to so sin as to be lost in hell?

A very simple answer to the question would be YES! But you might think that that answer is just my opinion. So, we will just look at what the Bible says.

There are many passages that point out the fact that one who is saved may be eternally lost in hell. However just one will be sufficient to prove the point.

In Matthew 25:14-30 we read where The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man traveling into a far country. "The Lord" (who represents Christ) "called unto him his own servants" (verse 14). Now we do not have to wonder about whom the Lord was speaking. He said these were his own servants. In the conclusion of the Lord's teaching on this subject in verses 24-30, upon his return he calls unto him the servant who had one talent. He called this man, because he had not used his talent, a wicked and slothful servant (verse 26); and said, "And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth" (verse 30). Now remember this was the master's own servant. So, unless "outer darkness where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth" is heaven, one of the master's own servants went to hell.

The BIBLE Says:

J. T. Smith

QUESTION: Is it possible for a child of God to so sin as to be lost in hell?

A very simple answer to the question would be YES! But you might think that that answer is just my opinion. So, we will just look at what the Bible says.

There are many passages that point out the fact that one who is saved may be eternally lost in hell. However just one will be sufficient to prove the point.

In Matthew 25:14-30 we read where The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man travelling into a far country. "The Lord" (who represents Christ) "called unto him his own servants" (verse 14). Now we do not have to wonder about whom the Lord was speaking. He said these were his own servants. In the conclusion of the Lord's teaching on this subject in verses 24-30, upon his return he calls unto him the servant who had one talent. He called this man, because he had not used his talent, a wicked and slothful servant (verse 26); and said, "And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth" (verse 30). Now remember this was the master's own servant. So, unless "outer darkness where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth" is heaven, one of the master's own servants went to hell.

Joseph Hardy with MGM-TV

Joseph Hardy has entered into a deal with MGM Television to develop and direct projects for network placement, it was announced by Harris L. Kattelman, president of MGM Television.

Hardy's last project for MGM-TV was "Delaney," a 90-minute movie for NBC. Last season he directed Richard Chamberlain in the NET production "The Lady's Not For Burning" and the Robert Fryer production "Great Expectations."

LOOKS AREN'T EVERYTHING, but talent is and Lee Meriwether, co-star of "Barnaby Jones" has plenty of that. Here she poses as two of her favorite screen characters, the Madwoman of Chailot and Dracula.

TV MOVIE TIPS

TODAY — "Indict and Convict," (1974), 8:30 p.m. Ch. 7. This TV movie traces the investigation of a deputy district attorney who is suspected of murdering his wife and her lover — although at the time of the crime, he was more than 150 miles away.

"THE TENDER TRAP," (1955), 10:30 p.m. Ch. 9. The all-time great Debbie Reynolds movie with Frank Sinatra who is the bachelor who falls into the theme of "a man chases a girl until she catches him."

"MIRAGE," (1965), 11:30 p.m. Ch. 2. Taut but over-complicated thriller about a confused amnesia victim (Gregory Peck) who discovers he's implicated in a murder.

MONDAY — "Calling Northside 777," (1948), 12 noon, Ch. 11. A reporter (James Stewart) starts to believe the prisoner he is writing a human interest story about is innocent.

"ROMANCE OF A HORSETHIEF," (1971), 9 p.m. Ch. 7. A colorful picture of Jewish peasant life in Poland during the 1904 Russo-Japanese War, when horsetrading — and horsestealing — meant one's livelihood. The movie was filmed on location in Yugoslavia and stars Yul Brynner.

"A WALK WITH LOVE AND DEATH," 11:30 p.m. Ch. 2. A romance set amid the turbulence of the Hundred Years' War and filmed on location in Austria by John Huston make this movie a good watching bet.

TUESDAY — "Mother is a Freshman," (1949), 12 noon Ch. 11. How about an amiable romp about a widow and her teenage daughter (stars Loretta Young) who are both attending college.

"THE LAW," (1974) 8:30 p.m. Ch. 4. Two and one-half hours inside a big city's criminal courts provide the basic plot for this TV movie. It concerns a public defender's efforts to help a youth who is arrested on a drug violation and later charged with murder. The film's real strength lies in its uncompromising portrait of American justice — replete with deals, plea bargaining and red tape. This realism helped win the movie an Emmy and praise from former Associate Justice of the Supreme Court Abe Fortas.

"THE HORSEMEN" (1971) 11:30 p.m. Ch. 2. Omar Sharif and Jack Palance star in this action yarn about buzkashi, a dangerous sport in which players slash at each other with whips as they compete to haul animal carcasses past a goal line. Filmed in Spain and Afghanistan.

WEDNESDAY — "The Bad and the Beautiful" (1952), 4 p.m., Ch. 9. Five Oscars went to this excellent portrait of a Hollywood heel (Kirk Douglas) and those who fall into his orbit.

"THE TRIAL OF CHAPLAIN JENSEN," (1975) 8:30 p.m., Ch. 7. A TV movie based on a true story, dramatizes the case of a Navy chaplain who faced a court-martial on charges of adultery. Stars James Franciscus.

THURSDAY — "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance" (1962), 3:30 p.m., Ch. 7. Director John Ford's account of the death of a notorious gunman with an all-star cast including John Wayne, James Stewart, Vera Miles, Lee Marvin, Edmond O'Brien, Andy Devine, John Carradine and Ken Murray. The movie concludes on Friday.

"ADVENTURES OF THE QUEEN," (1975), 9 p.m., Ch. 2. A TV movie about the efforts to stop a psychotic who is threatening to blow up a passenger liner unless he is paid $20,000,000. Produced by Irwin Allen who brought to the screen such biggies as "The Towering Inferno" and "The Poseidon Adventure." Like the latter film, this one was also filmed aboard the Queen Mary.

"THE LAST DAY" (1975), 9 p.m. Ch. 4. A TV movie about the infamous Dalton gang attempt to hold up both banks in their Kansas home town. Stars Richard Widmark, Robert Conrad, Barbara Rush, Tim Matheson and Richard Jaeckel.

FRIDAY — "Alexander Hamilton," (1931), 4 p.m. Ch. 52. Stars George Arliss in an absorbing account of the great statesman's life — both personal and business — in post-Revolutionary War America. Worth watching.

"THE MARK OF ZORRO," (1974), 8 p.m. Ch. 7. A TV movie follows the masked swordsman as he defends the weak against their oppressors in early 19th Century California.

"A MEMORY FOR TWO MONDAYS" (1971), 8:05 p.m. Ch. 28. Arthur Miller's comedy-drama about life during the Great Depression. The emphasis is on mood and characterization and stars Jack Warden.

"AND THEN THERE

WERE NONE (1945) 12:30-4:30 Ch. 11. If you've never seen this Agatha Christie thriller about 10 people on a desolate island who are killed one by one, it's worth staying up to watch. Stars Barry Fitzgerald, Judith Anderson, Louis Hayward.

WALTER SCOTT'S Personality Parade

Want the facts? Want to learn the truth about prominent personalities? Want informed opinion? Write Walter Scott, Parade, 733 3rd Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017. Your full name will be used unless otherwise requested. Volume of mail received makes personal replies impossible.

Q. Is there any chance that President Ford will dump Nelson Rockefeller and run with Ronald Reagan on the 1976 Republican party ticket?—C. Bethell, New York City.

A. There is some chance if Reagan picks up considerable delegate strength, but one of Ford's most admirable traits is loyalty. For weeks in early 1974 when he was Vice President he went around the country flatly declaring that "Richard Nixon is totally innocent and completely exonerated" when he undoubtedly suspected otherwise.

JEAN HARLOW AND PAUL BERN AT THEIR WEDDING

Q. Has the true story of Jean Harlow and the suicide of her husband, Paul Bern, ever been told? Did he shoot himself because he was impotent as so many books say?—G. L., St. Joseph, Mo.

A. The marriage between Paul Bern and Jean Harlow lasted only two months. Bern, an MGM producer, shot himself on Sept. 5, 1932. His suicide note was brief: "Dearest Dear, Unfortunately this is the only way to make good the frightful wrong I have done you and to wipe out my abject humiliation. I love you. Paul [P.S.] You understand that last night was only a comedy."

MGM leaked the rumor that Bern was impotent, and Dr. Edward B. Jones, personal physician to Bern and L. B. Mayer, head of MGM, agreed to state that Bern suffered from infantile genitalia. But the truth was that Bern had a common law wife, actress Dorothy Millette, confined to a sanitarium in Connecticut at the time he married Harlow. Dorothy Millette left the sanitarium and was about to visit Bern in Hollywood when he shot himself. He did not want to drag any of the parties into what he felt would become a messy bigamy suit.

Q. There is a story out in publishing circles that Time magazine has paid $1 million in an out-of-court settlement to a woman named Levy for falsely labeling her a prostitute. I know the story has been hushed up, but can you report any facts?—S. Cohen, Brooklyn, N.Y.

A. Time magazine has settled $13,333 on Mrs. Kochava Levy, 31, of Tel Aviv, Israel. In its edition of March 17, 1975, Time erred in characterizing Mrs. Levy, the wife of a policeman, as a prostitute. The magazine said she had darted into the Savoy Hotel in Tel Aviv a few minutes before an Arab terrorist attack in order to avoid a police sweep of prostitutes. In fact Mrs. Levy was a heroine on that occasion. Of nine hostages held in the Savoy Hotel by the terrorists, she was the only one who could speak Arabic. The terrorists permitted her to escort one wounded hostage from the hotel. Mrs. Levy could then have escaped. Instead she insisted upon going back in an effort to obtain the release of other hostages.

Q. I have heard the name Judge Crater mentioned several times and wondered who he was and what was his story.—M. C., Bakersfield, Cal.

A. Joseph Force Crater was 41 and a New York State Supreme Court Justice when he disappeared Aug. 6, 1930. He was last seen entering a taxi at 9:15 p.m. after dining with friends. Although Judge Crater was declared legally dead in June, 1939, his case is still open in the files of the New York City Police Department.

JUDGE CRATER

Q. American TV news bureaus in Moscow—are they allowed to use their own cameramen?—Jon Holland, Atlanta, Ga.

A. When an American TV correspondent in Moscow wants to photograph someone or something, he must apply to the Soviets, who provide him with a Russian camera crew. The only time U.S. TV camera crews are allowed to photograph inside the Soviet Union is when they accompany some visiting U.S. dignitary.

Q. Is Frank Sinatra determined to clear out of Palm Springs? Hasn't he put his desert house up for sale?—Dana Harris, San Bernardino, Cal.

A. Sinatra's estate in Palm Desert is for sale. To date—no takers.

Q. In his AFL-CIO speech, Alexander Solzhenitsyn, the famous Russian writer, mentioned a man named Alexander Shliapnikov. Who was Shliapnikov?—Edward Jensen, Washington, D. C.

A. According to Solzhenitsyn: "In the years before the Revolution it was Shliapnikov who ran the whole Communist party in Russia—not Lenin, who was an emigré. In 1921, he headed the Workers' Opposition which was charging the Communist leadership with betraying the workers' interests . . . Shliapnikov disappeared from sight. He was arrested somewhat later and since he firmly stood his ground he was shot in prison and his name is perhaps unknown to most people . . . But I remind you: Before the Revolution the head of the Communist party of Russia was Shliapnikov—not Lenin."

Q. They say that almost 20 per cent of the generals and the admirals in our Army and Navy are retiring from the service this year. Why is that?—Bob Sage, Norfolk, Va.

A. The reason is financial. Many of them will earn more as civilians than they do as military officers because pensions are raised as the consumer price index rises. In the past three years pension benefits have zoomed 33 per cent. Thus an admiral who retired four years ago earns more money today than an admiral on active duty.

BARBRA STREISAND

Q. To settle a bet, has Barbra Streisand ever had plastic surgery done on her nose?—Mary Underhill, Warwick, R.I.

A. To date, no.

Q. Does Queen Elizabeth of England own a plantation in Mississippi for which the U.S. government pays her a subsidy not to raise cotton?—Thomas Whitman Craft, Raleigh, Miss.

A. She does not.

PRIMER ON MURDER

"We are experiencing a murder epidemic that is breaking all previous records. More Americans were murdered from 1970 through 1974 than were killed during the entire Vietnam War."

"In 1975, one of every 10,000 Americans will be murdered."

The most likely murderer is a victim's relative. "Almost a third of all victims are related to their killers."

So long as the economy remains depressed, murder in this country will boom.

The peak months for murder in the United States are July and December. The murder rate soars during weekends.

Many authorities are not aware of the correlation between material expectations, a depressed economy and the growing murder rate. Many think the answer lies in tougher criminal penalties and larger police forces.

The above are just a few of the statements, ideas, and conclusions of a Stanford University psychiatrist, Dr. Donald Lunde, in his fascinating new book, "Murder and Madness."

A professor of law and psychiatry, Lunde points out that murderers are not a homogeneous group of bad guys. "For the most part," he writes, "they are husbands, wives, lovers, neighbors, friends, and acquaintances--persons who can no longer endure chronic frustration."

In former depressions, Lunde observes, murder rates went down and suicides went up. Today the opposite holds true. Why? Because Americans no longer blame themselves for their material misfortunes. They blame the system. They expect society to provide them with certain material things. When society doesn't, people vent their anger, frustration, and dissatisfaction on others.

Most murders in the U.S. are committed by men in their twenties. Lunde believes that young people are more likely than adults to blame external factors for their frustration or troubles.

But felony murders are also on the rise, and according to Dr. Lunde, one major reason for this is the lack of gun control. "Two-thirds of all murders in the U.S. are committed with guns, 92 per cent of these with handguns. Gun ownership is highest in the regions with the highest murder rates," he says.

"You are most likely to die young" if you live in the South where 13 out of every 100,000 persons are murdered each year. In New England the rate is four out of 100,000.

If you live in a large city, your chances of being murdered are twice what they are in a suburb or rural area.

Black men are 10 times more vulnerable than white men to murder, black women five times more than white women. In more than 90 per cent of all homicides, killer and victim belong to the same race. Where racial lines are crossed, it is more frequently the whites murdering blacks than the reverse.

In the majority of homicides the murderer has been drinking prior to the murder. Alcohol and murder are therefore closely linked.

Lunde does not blame the rise in the murder rate only on frustration. He explains that "even changes in child-rearing practices have contributed to the holocaust. Permissive parents are less likely to insist that children develop and use internal constraints."

"Organized religion, an institution that taught self-restraint and accountability, reaches fewer and fewer young people."

"Corruption in government makes it easier for people to blame external forces for hard times. Many have forgotten and some never realized that 'there is no free lunch.'"

"Murder and Madness" costs $3.95 and can be purchased from the Stanford Alumni Association, Bowman Alumni House, Stanford, Cal. 94305.

McGOVERN SUES

Sen. George McGovern (D., S. Dak.), who is willing to run as a Presidential or Vice Presidential candidate on the 1976 Democratic ticket, may come into a large fortune.

Several weeks ago he sued seven large corporations in Texas for $1.09 million in damages, and he stands a good chance of collecting.

Under Texas law a candidate whose opponent received illegal campaign contributions can recover from the contributors twice the amount they contributed.

The seven corporations McGovern sued have already pleaded guilty to $545,000 in illegal contributions and have been fined $33,000.

The corporations charged in the suit with illegal campaign contributions to President Nixon's reelection campaign of 1972 are American Airlines, Ashland Oil, Braniff Airways, Goodyear Tire & Rubber, Gulf Oil, Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing, and Phillips Petroleum.

When asked what he would do with the money if he won his case, McGovern said, "Probably contribute it to charity."

BOX OFFICE RECORDS

This summer U.S. movies are doing so phenomenally at the box office that 1975 may turn out to be the richest year in film history.

"Jaws," the shark epic which grossed $14 million--it cost $10 million--in its first seven days of nationwide release, will probably earn $150 million worldwide. Also doing well are Warren Beatty's "Shampoo," which is estimated to gross $60 million; "Mandingo," produced by Dino De Laurentiis, will probably earn $40 million. "Return of the Pink Panther," starring Peter Sellers, should gross in the vicinity of $20 million. A hot, hot box office this summer.

BIRTH CONTROL BILL

The Italian Senate recently approved a bill which would provide free contraceptives and birth control advice to all citizens of Italy.

What a dramatic change in public opinion! Four years ago any Italian who publicly advocated contraception could be sent to jail for one year.

The new bill calls for establishing birth control centers in cities, towns, and villages and providing free contraceptive devices and advice on how to use them to any Italian or foreigner residing in Italy. The measure needs the approval of the Chamber of Deputies, where despite opposition from the Vatican, it stands a good chance of passing.

DIRTY TRICKS

Of the thousands of Americans employed by the CIA since 1947, only one of its field officers, Philip Agee, defected. The former agent who worked in Mexico and South America but now lives in England, quit the agency, he explains, because "I finally understood...how much suffering it was causing, that millions of people all over the world had been killed or at least had had their lives destroyed by the CIA and the institutions it supports."

In a recent "Playboy" magazine interview, Agee reveals that the CIA has a dirty trick department called the Technical Services Division (TSD), whose laboratories "have produced all sorts of things, some of them pretty unpleasant."

"For instance, TSD has developed an invisible itching powder--I think it's made of asbestos fibers...that drives its victims wild for about three days. My agents used a lot of it, they went to leftist meetings and sprinkled it on the seats of toilets."

"I remember," he adds, "another chemical we had. If you dropped it into somebody's drink, it would give him a horrible body odor."

"We also had another drug that would make people say whatever they were thinking, just babble on..."

"We even had an ointment that came in a little container that looked like a ring. On the underside was a little compartment filled with ointment that, when you smeared it unobtrusively on the door handle of a car, would give the person who opened the door terrible burns on his hand."

Agee, a 40-year-old Notre Dame graduate, whose book exposing CIA tactics has been published in Britain and Canada has turned left-wing and is convinced the CIA should be done away with. Many of his former colleagues feel the same way about him.

HEART REPAIRS

Whether they come from guns or knives, wounds to the heart need not be fatal. If the wounded person makes it to the hospital alive, chances for survival are pretty good.

According to surgeons in Houston, who operated on 350 such patients in recent years, it is better to be stabbed than shot in the heart. Of those patients suffering from gun wounds, only one out of three can be saved by suturing the damaged heart. Four out of five stabbing victims make it.

Of the 350 reported cases, surgeons saved 251, or more than 70%, the crucial factor, of course, being the presence of a heart surgeon when the patients were ambulated in.

KISSINGER- CASTRO RAPPROCHEMENT —HOW SOON?

is no point in perpetuating the hostility between Cuba and the United States. A rapprochement is inevitable. Castro has agreed to return a $2 million ransom paid in 1972 by Southern Airways for the return of its hijacked jet, and the airline should get the check any day now if it hasn't already.

Castro has also engaged in talks with Sens. Jacob Javits, Claiborne Pell and George McGovern. A few weeks ago he talked to Rep. Charles Whalen Jr., a Republican of Dayton, Ohio. He has made clear to U.S. politicians that if the U.S. will end the embargo on Cuba and permit food and medicine to be shipped into Havana, he, Castro, will be prepared to start bilateral negotiations with the U.S.A.

In Havana, however, for home consumption, Castro blusters in his characteristic bellicose fashion that the following conditions must be met before bilateral talks get under way: the U.S. Guantanamo Naval Station must be returned to Cuba; there will be no compensation for $2 billion of U.S. property expropriated by his regime; the U.S. must muzzle anti-Castro Cubans in the U.S.; and Washington must promise not to interfere in Cuba's special relationship with the Soviet Union.

Fence-mending between Havana and Washington is very much in the cards, especially as economic sanctions against Cuba are inevitably lifted. But the fence-mending will surely not be on Castro's terms.

Keeping Up... With Youth

by Pamela Swift

The Suicides

The "famous father" syndrome has hit Hollywood hard. In the past few months, Jenny Arness, 24, daughter of TV star James Arness; Jonathan Peck, 30, son of film star Gregory Peck; and Dan Dailey III, 27, son of song-and-dance man Dan Dailey, have all committed suicide.

Each was a child of a broken home, and each felt strongly the responsibility of bearing a well-known name and trying to live up to it.

In most cases the children of film stars do not lead particularly normal lives. They are fawned upon, exploited, spoiled, or neglected, and if they follow in the footsteps of a famous parent, their talent or lack of it is invidiously compared. Frank Sinatra Jr., for example, has read countless times that compared to his father he has no voice at all.

Some offspring break under the strain. Others go their own way. A few, like Liza Minnelli and Jane Fonda, become as talented as their famous parents. But it's a tough row to hoe—especially for those who believe they have nothing to offer but a name which they are reluctant to take advantage of.

SHANE GOULD

Slowly but surely

Women are slowly and inexorably surpassing the world sports records established by men.

Take swimming. In the 400 meters free-style event, the male who won the gold medal in the 1956 Olympic Games was clocked at 4 minutes, 27.3 seconds. In the 1972 Olympic Games the corresponding time for the female who won that event—Shane Gould—was 4 minutes, 19 seconds.

In track and field events, the women still have a long way to go. At their current pace they will need another 20-30 years to match the records set by males who competed in the 1912 Olympics in Stockholm. But eventually they will do it. They are becoming better athletes all the time.

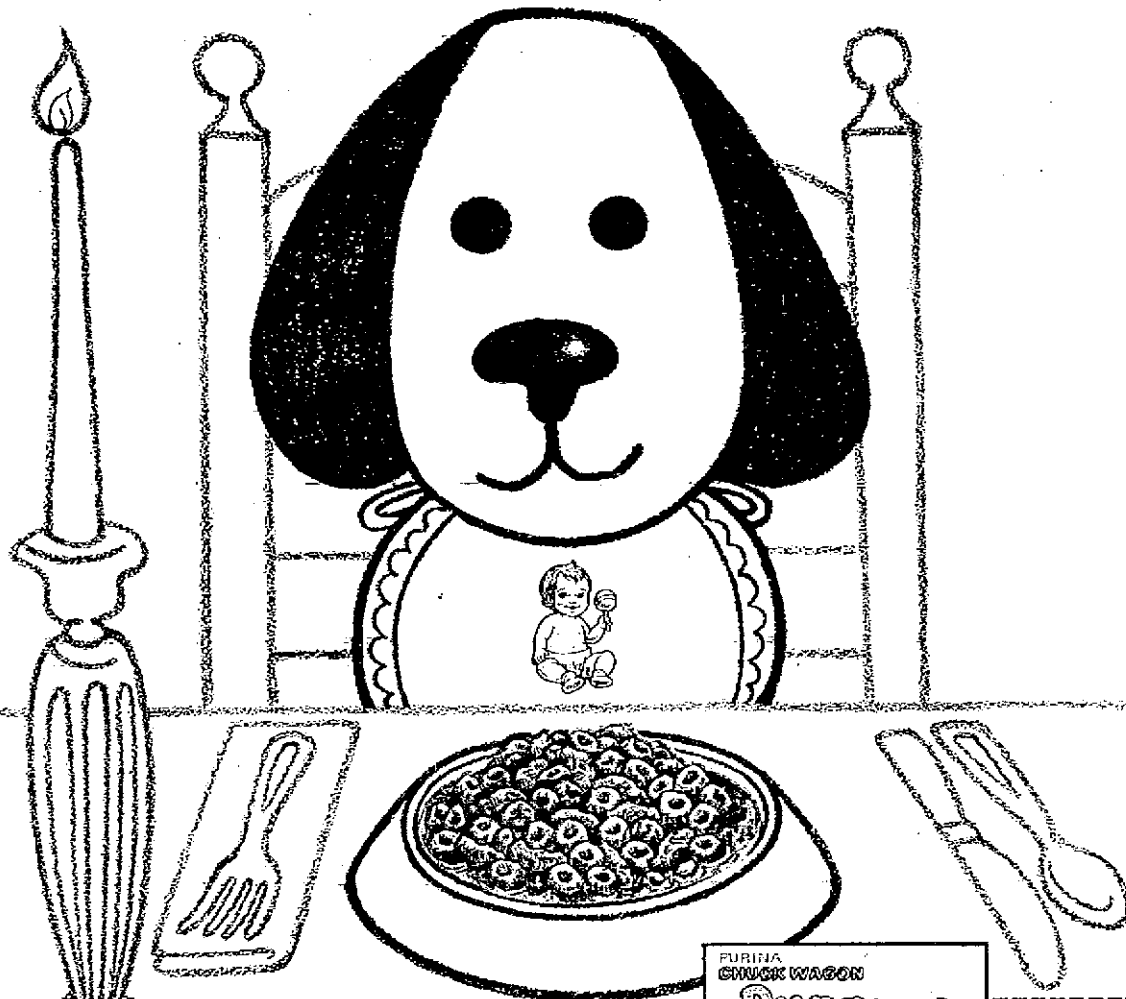

New French Showman

Frederic Mitterand, 27, nephew of the French Presidential candidate Francois Mitterand, who lost in 1974 by the thinnest of margins to Giscard d'Estaing, is one of the most enterprising young men in Paris.

A few months ago young Mitterand raised $400,000 and, in a working-class district of Paris, opened a complex called L'Entrepot which is French for "The Warehouse." It consists of three movie theaters, a library, a restaurant, a videotheque, and in the past six months it has become the rage of Paris youth.

Mitterand specializes in showing very old or avant-garde films at cut rates, keeping his theaters open from midnight until dawn. Says one of his customers: "It's cheaper than spending the night at a hotel."

If you don't smoke, we're not about to persuade you to start.

But if you do, we'd like to persuade you to try a cigarette you'll like more than the one you're smoking now.

We mean Vantage, of course.

Vantage gives you flavor like a full-flavor cigarette. Without anywhere near the 'tar' and nicotine.

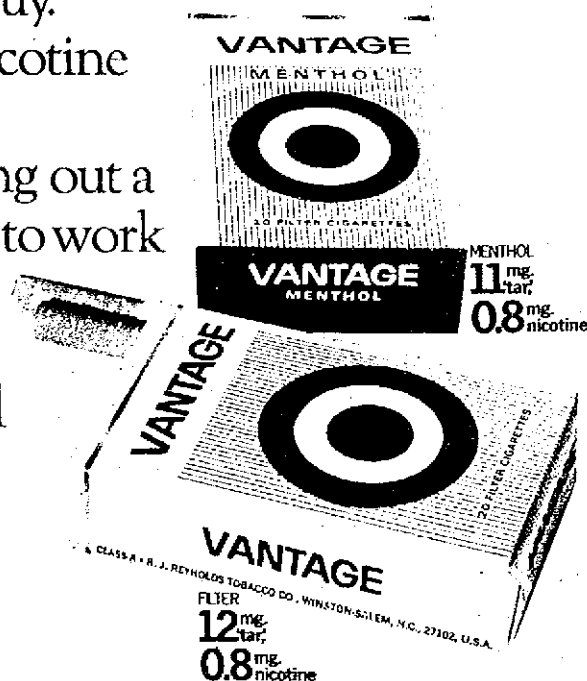

That's a simple statement of truth.

We don't want you to misunderstand us. Vantage is not the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you can buy.

It's probably the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you'll enjoy smoking.

DUARTE, CAL.

A 17-year-old girl was brought into the City of Hope Medical Center in Duarte, Cal., recently for treatment of asthma. While in the hospital, she developed severe, recurrent pains in her abdomen. Since the X-rays were inconclusive, her physician ordered a chemical test for tumor activity in the intestines. The results were frightening. A reading of 10 would have been normal. The girl's reading was 90, indicating that she had a malignant carcinoid tumor. An exploratory operation on her intestines seemed inevitable.

Dr. Marshall Gilston, a specially trained pharmacist at the City of Hope, reviewed the girl's medication record. He found that she was taking an asthma drug that interacted with the chemicals used in the cancer test. It produced a misleading result.

At Dr. Gilston's suggestion, the physician stopped the asthma drug for 36 hours. Then he had the cancer test repeated. This time, it came out absolutely normal. The girl had no cancer. Her abdominal pains were due to a viral infection that cleared up by itself.

Patient protection

The City of Hope is one of a group of leading hospitals throughout the United States that have established special new systems to protect their patients against dangerous drug mistakes by doctors, nurses and other hospital personnel.

The need for such safeguards is critical today. Dr. Allen J. Swartz, director of pharmacy at the City of Hope and a professor of pharmacy at UCLA, told PARADE that more than 100,000 serious errors are made daily in American hospitals in prescribing, preparing and dispensing medications. These mistakes are causing thousands of deaths of hospital patients every year, Dr. Swartz said.

"Many patients are dying who don't need to die," Dr. Swartz declared. "In addition, countless hospital patients are not recovering as fast as they should because, through somebody's error, they are not receiving the proper medications for their condition."

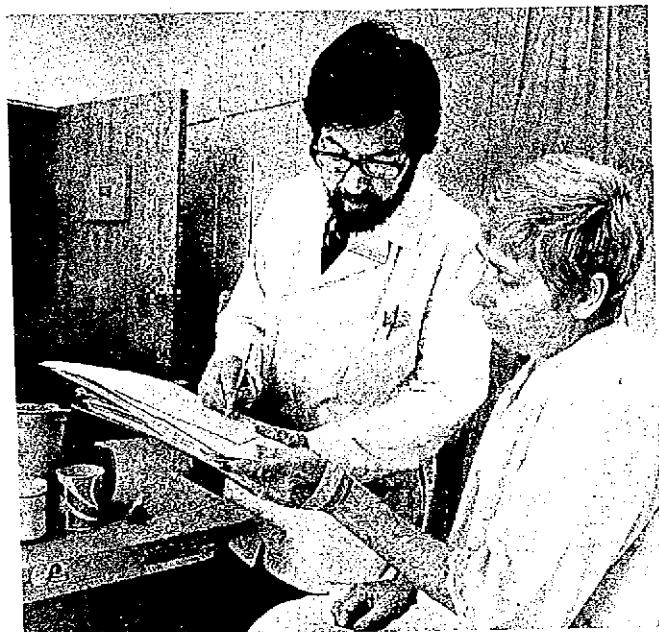

Dire results

The big problem is that many physicians are inadequately trained in the use of drugs. According to experts in the field, the average doctor is familiar with only a tiny percentage of the 7000 principal drugs in the medical arsenal. As a result, some doctors prescribe the wrong drugs, the wrong dosage, or the wrong method of administering it. They often prescribe drugs that interact hazardously with another drug. Many nurses are as guilty. They write down doctors' orders incorrectly or make careless mistakes in carrying them out. They give medications to one patient that are meant for another patient. Some hospital pharmacists make errors in filling prescriptions.

In the course of a nationwide investigation, PARADE encountered case after case of tragic drug mistakes in hospitals.

Is Your Hospital Giving You the Right Drugs?

by Donald Robinson

City of Hope Medical Center in California has begun a program to help prevent medication errors. Pharmacists there not only dispense drugs but also answer drug-related questions of patients and advise doctors on their prescriptions. Here pharmacist Marshall Gilston talks with a patient.

For example:

- A physician in one Midwestern hospital made a mistake in his arithmetic and directed a nurse to give a middle-aged man 10 times the recommended dosage of an extremely toxic anti-cancer drug. It cost the patient amputation of his leg.

- A nurse in a New York hospital accidentally switched two unlabeled hypodermic syringes on her medication cart. She administered an injection of penicillin to a woman patient who was highly allergic to the antibiotic. The woman almost choked to death.

- In a well-known West Coast hospital, a prominent surgeon was performing an abdominal operation on a young woman. Toward the end of the procedure, he ordered the wound washed out with an antibiotic solution. He didn't know that the antibiotic interacted with the curare-type anesthesia the patient had received to depress her breathing.

The antibiotic depressed the patient's breathing still more and she went into respiratory arrest. In two minutes she was dead.

Nothing the operating room team did could revive her.

They are far from isolated cases. A long-term investigation into the drug setup of a famous university hospital in the South was conducted by five experienced medical researchers. They discovered that drug errors of commission reached a rate of nearly 21 per cent.

The national rate may be much greater because many drug mistakes go unreported. An investigator who made a widely heralded study of medication errors at a University of Florida teaching hospital estimated that "something on the order of 51,200" major and minor medication errors probably occurred in that one hospital during the year the study was underway. Yet only 36 official reports of drug errors were filed in the entire period by the hospital people involved.

The City of Hope, a hospital specializing in catastrophic diseases, has launched an intensive campaign to eliminate medication mistakes. It has instituted a far-reaching four-point program:

1. No City of Hope pharmacist is allowed to dispense any drug until he is given a copy of the physician's drug order in writing. This is a much more radical step than it sounds. Surprising to say, the vast majority of hospitals in the United States does not take such a precaution.

According to Dr. Swartz, in 90 per cent of the country's hospitals, a nurse or a ward clerk can order any drug she wants by telephone, or walk into the hospital pharmacy and ask for it. The pharmacist sees nothing in writing.

"With no copy of the doctor's order to check against," Dr. Swartz said, "it's a very risky situation for the patient, and we won't tolerate it."

New system

2. To cut down on drug errors by nurses, the City of Hope has installed a revolutionary new "unit dose system."

In most hospitals, drugs are dispensed in bulk containers to each nurse, and she stores them in her own drug closet. When the hour comes for her medication rounds, the nurse usually counts out the pills for each patient into unmarked paper cups, and fills unmarked hypodermic syringes. As a rule, no medication on the cart bears a label stating what it is or for what patient it is intended. The nurse trusts her memory.

"And let me warn you that a nurse's memory can betray her," Dr. Swartz said. "She may get a telephone call while she is making her medication rounds, or she may be interrupted by an emergency with a patient," he explained. "By the time she gets back to her medication cart, it is difficult for her to tell which medication is which."

Under the "unit dose system," all medications are dispensed by the hospital pharmacy in individual units of use such as one injection in a disposable syringe, one liquid dose in a disposable bottle, or one tablet in a foil package. Each item is fully labeled as to its identity and strength.

The pharmacist's check

Every morning, a City of Hope pharmacist—not a nurse—checks each patient's chart to see what medications he is to receive that day. The pharmacist then places the precise number of unit doses in a separate drawer in the nurse's medication cart that is clearly marked with the patient's name.

3. As an extra safeguard, the City of Hope has set up a chain of satellite pharmacies throughout the hospital. In addition to the central pharmacy, there now is a well-equipped pharmacy close at hand for every 35 patients, with a clinical pharmacist on duty who knows the drug needs of each patient.

4. The final point in the City of Hope program, and the most important, is its corps of clinical pharmacists. They are an entirely new type of pharmacist. An ordinary hospital pharmacist spends most of his time filling prescriptions. A clinical pharmacist spends most of his time taking care of patients.

The clinical pharmacists at the City of Hope accompany the physicians on their rounds, advising on proper drugs and dosages to prescribe. They consult with nurses, dietitians and occupational therapists on drug questions. They confer daily with patients, showing them how to take their medicines and watching them for adverse drug reactions.

Shortly after a patient is admitted to the hospital, a clinical pharmacist goes to his bedside. He obtains a thorough drug history from him, including a list of every new medication he's been taking and any drug allergies he may have.

In the nick of time

This drug history saved an 8-year-old boy from disaster recently. The child had received a spinal injection, and he reacted with violent nausea and vomiting. His physician prescribed a powerful tranquilizer.

A clinical pharmacist stopped the nurse just in time from giving him the tranquilizer. He'd discovered from the boy's mother that he was very sensitive to that tranquilizer. It would have given him convulsions.

The clinical pharmacists help to keep drug costs down. One City of Hope patient developed an infection following open-heart surgery, and his physician ordered a 14-day course of treatment with a very expensive antibiotic called Keflin. After he'd checked the patient's allergy history, a clinical pharmacist recommended to the physician that he use intravenous penicillin rather than the high-priced Keflin. It cured the infection just as rapidly, and it saved $1100 in drug bills.

Talks to patients

A clinical pharmacist sees all patients prior to their discharge from the City of Hope to instruct them about the drugs they have to take when they go home. I listened in when Thomas Saito, a clinical pharmacist in the cardiology wing, talked with a 46-year-old man recovering from a heart attack.

"I have a list of the medicines that your doctor will prescribe for you when you're discharged tomorrow," Saito told him. He named six drugs and showed him samples of each.

"This is digitalis," Saito started. "You're to take two tablets each day—in the midmorning after breakfast. This particular drug is extremely important for you. It slows and strengthens the heart. You're probably going to have to take it for a long while. You must be careful never to miss a dose."

He went into detail about the six drugs, patiently answering questions.

"I ain't so scared about going home anymore," said the patient.

clinical pharmacists as an invasion of their dignity.

"I know my business," a physician snapped to a clinical pharmacist. "I don't need any help from you."

Most doctors at the City of Hope are solid supporters of the program, though. Dr. Rachmiel Levine, the executive medical director and an internationally renowned diabetes expert, said:

"These clinical pharmacists have become invaluable members of the health team. Any doctor who resents their advice is taking a damned silly attitude. Heck, I can't pretend that I can remember all of the drug dosages. I'm very glad to have their assistance."

The records show that the City of Hope program has been remarkably effective in cutting down on drug errors. Before it went into operation, Dr. Swartz said, the City of Hope had a medication mistake rate of 4 to 5 per cent. Today, its error rate is less than one half of one per cent—among the lowest in the United States.

Moves elsewhere

The American Hospital Association reports that more than 300 top hospitals have all-out drives underway to reduce the threat of medication mistakes. They include such prominent institutions as Yale-New Haven Hospital, University of Wisconsin Hospitals in Madison, Ohio State University Hospitals in Columbus, University of California Hospitals in San Francisco, and Lenox Hill Hospital in New York City.

Alexander McMahon, president of the AHA, pointed out that the extra personnel and special equipment required for all these systems can increase pharmacy costs by 25 to 40 per cent.

It doesn't worry him. "They are a bargain if they mean additional protection for every hospital patient," he said.

my FAVORITE jokes

by HOWARD MANN

EDITOR'S NOTE: Howard Mann, who besides entertaining in top clubs has appeared in over 300 commercials, was, in fact, making a commercial in which he played George Washington, when he got the idea to do a characterization of Washington commenting humorously on Revolutionary events. "As soon as I put on the cocked hat, the powdered wig and uniform, I felt I was Washington," he says. "I couldn't resist kissing the face on dollar bills."

Mann will be touring the nation's colleges and convention halls this fall in his version of Washington.

Here is his fictional Washington:

When I went down to the Continental Congress in 1775, I was the only one wearing a uniform. I wanted to be Commander in Chief. I had worked for the English, learned the business and figured it was time to open up my own country.

Paul Revere was a problem. He leaned toward the commercial. He ran around saying, "The British are coming, the British are coming—want to buy one of my pots?"

In the first years we had few weapons—and about 10 cartridges to a man. We had to figure out other ways to fight—insults, for example. We would cry across the lines, "Hey, Red-coat, Big Ben is 10 minutes slow."

Some of our men were rugged individualists. Two frontiersmen enlisted with Morgan's Riflemen. One complained: "Zeb, I don't go for this here stuff one dang bit. They give you a gun and makes you shoot people you don't even know." Second man said: "You're dang right. Let's take the guns and go home and shoot people we do know."

Army food was terrible. There were signs saying, "Food is ammunition, don't waste it." One sergeant said: "Let's invite the enemy to dinner."

There was quite a bit of native humor in those days, particularly from my friend Ben Franklin. When the Declaration of Independence came to being signed Franklin was afraid everyone would be away for the Fourth of July weekend.

The dynamic Mick Jagger: With lipstick and tight pants the 32-year-old leader of the Rolling Stones rock band aims his appeal at both sexes. He also masterminds the group's spectacular money-making performances.

Mick Jagger— The Brain Behind the Rolling Stones

by Charles Peterson

LOS ANGELES. In the summer of 1964, before the Rolling Stones embarked on their first American tour, a British politician predicted: "Our relations with America are bound to deteriorate. The Americans will assume that British youth have reached a new low in degradation."

That prophecy was completely wrong. Repeating earlier successes in this country, the Stones, led by their 32-year-old king of rock and roll, Michael Philip Jagger, recently completed a record-breaking 24-city tour, performing for a million screaming fans.

For their two-month tour each of the Stones—vocalist Mick Jagger, guitarist Keith Richard, drummer Charlie Watts, and bass guitarist Bill Wyman—earned approximately $500,000.

Why are Jagger and the Stones so popular?

To begin with, Mick Jagger is sexy. His charismatic swagger and his outrageous performances make for wild, unique entertainment. Usually Jagger enters center-stage, puckers his hermaphroditic lips, sneers at the audience, then glides into his heel-and-toe boogie. Wearing pants especially tailored to cling to his buttocks, he sashays, struts, prances, jerks, grinds, all the while suggestively and slowly entrancing his audience into a sort of hypnotic spell in which he leads his fans into a state of orgasmic frenzy.

What the Stones offer in music is basic rock 'n' roll—tough stuff, blues styled a la Chuck Berry. Complementing their music are Jagger's calculatedly crude lyrics. Over the years the Stones have deliberately composed songs like "Let's Spend the Night Together," in order to offend middle-class sensibilities. In other Stones compositions one finds an overwhelming disdain for the frustrations of pedestrian living.

Rebellious youth

Mick Jagger and the Rolling Stones represent rebellious youth. They and their music epitomize the complete negation of accepted standards.

When the Stones first appeared on Britain's pop scene in 1963, they acted surly and contemptuous even hurled cream pies at reporters. Labeled "the bad boys of rock and roll," they proceeded to project an unsavory image. In 1967, for example, Mick Jagger, Keith Richard and Brian Jones, who was later to drown, received stiff prison sentences for possession of pep pills. Eventually Jagger's sentence was reduced to one year's probation. The other sentences were overturned.

Mick Jagger was born on July 26, 1943, in Dartford, Kent, one of two sons of Eva and Joe Jagger, a physical educa-

In short, Moneysworth is a live wire sparking off hot information on the current money scene. It galvanizes readers all over the country into sending us ardent fan letters like these:

• "The government has proven itself completely impotent in the fight against inflation. My only salvation comes from the advice I find in Moneysworth. It saves me each year as much as I lose through inflation."—Theresa Ramseler; San Francisco.

• "Your article on the 15% interest paid by Mexican banks has made it possible for me to retire in style. How can I ever thank you enough?"—Eric T. Svenson; Fallbrook, Calif.

• "Thanks to Moneysworth, I am $5,417 richer. I battled the Social Security Administration unsuccessfully for 18 months, then finally won out by following the advice of your brilliant article 'By All Means, Appeal.' May I say thank you?"—Mrs. Shirley E. Dominguez; Waterbury, Conn.

• "Your article on air-fare 'triangular' routes was an astonishing. My wife and I saved $100 each on a round-trip to New York by stopping off at Las Vegas on the way back as you suggested."—H. V. Kesselman; Los Angeles.

• "You're not going to believe this, but I have parlayed $146 into $90,000 thanks to your informative article on breaking into real estate. How can I ever express my gratitude sufficiently?"—Horace T. Pinrose; Montgomery, Iowa.

• "Your write-up on income averaging for tax purposes saved us $1,100 this year. We didn't realize retirees could do this. Thank you, thank you, thank you!"—Mr. & Mrs. J. Long; Morro Bay, Calif.

• "Your advice on cut-rate gasolines has saved me at least $150 over the past two years."—Harold Zide; Peabody, Mass.

• "We salute Moneysworth for its excellent report on our free sex-counseling-by-telephone service. As a result of it, we've received calls from all 50 of the United States—including Hawaii and Alaska—and even a few from Europe and Africa."—Community Sex Information Foundation; Boston; (617) 232-2336.

• "Your recommendation that readers reduce orthodontic bills by having the work done at a university dental school saved me $1,350 on my daughter's teeth."—Bob G. Walters; Oxon Hills, Md.

• "Your news reports on investments have brought me, in a matter of months, $12,996 in profit, tripling my money. Let me assure you that I shall be a Moneysworth subscriber for life."—Lawrence Gray; Ypsilanti, Mich.

• "Bravo for your advice on combating a bad credit rating. It enabled me to overcome a black mark given me erroneously by a Seattle credit bureau. Moneysworth is worth its weight in gold. People who see me reading it in public always exclaim 'Oh! I love that publication!' I always reply that I do, too. Go! Go! Go!"—Betty J. Taylor; Juneau, Alaska.

• "Your tip on flying to Europe via Afghanistan saved me $450. You've made me a subscriber for life."—Charles B. Fager, M.D.; Harrisburg Pa.

• "Your advice on Social Security resulted in a $3,135 lump-sum cash payment to my wife, and $171 monthly pension. The best investment I ever made was a subscription to Moneysworth."—Dr. Herman W. Horton; La Grange, Ill.

• "As a result of your report on 14.7% interest paid by Mexican banks, I invested $120,000. My yield has been $18,000 greater over the past three years than if I had not read Moneysworth. You are a 'must' on my list and, frankly, I don't know how you keep your subscription price so low."—G. Peter Upham; Vineland, N.J.

• "As a result of your article on nonprofit, low-cost memorial associations, we have been receiving 400 inquiries per day. You've got an inkling of the immense amount of money your subscribers have saved when you realize that each of our members saves well over $1,000 on a funeral. Congratulations on a job well done."—Richard James Stevens, President, Continental Association of Funeral and Memorial Societies; Chicago.

• "Thank you for putting me onto the '62+ Club' of the Community State Bank of Albany, New York, which offers free checking accounts, free statements, free check imprinting, free leatherette check folders, and free postage-paid bank-by-mail envelopes to all retirees."—Mrs. Jim Smith; Kansas City, Mo.

• "Your tip about deducting the cost of transportation between my two teaching jobs saved me in taxes at least the cost of a ten-year subscription. Not only that, but your publication is lively, off-beat, a delight to read."—Prof. Reuben Garner; State University College; Brockport, N.Y.

• "Thanks to your article 'How to Buy a New Car for $125 Over Dealer's Cost,' I just bought a Chevy at a saving that I conservatively estimate at $350."—Ron Bromert; Anita, Iowa.

• "Your article 'Inaccurate Billing by the Phone Company' led me to discover four years of overcharges. I got a $1,593 refund."—Armand DiRienzo; Bristol, Pa.

• "Moneysworth's product ratings sure stretch the dollar. I bought the Canonet 35MM rangefinder camera which you recommended, and saved 30%."—Robert Goodrich; Tucson, Ariz.

• "Your article 'How to Fight a Traffic Ticket' saved me a $200 lawyer's fee and a ticket. I did exactly as you suggested—taking pictures of the scene and double-checking the statute book—and came out the winner in court. Many thanks for the money you have saved me."—W.H. Wendel; Hicksville, N.Y.

• "Your article 'How to Avoid Paying an Exorbitant Doctor Bill' saved me $65. As a token of gratitude, I enclose payment for extension of my subscription."—Carl Wagner; Yorktown Heights, N.Y.

• "Your expose of charity rackets was a shocker. I've crossed several well-known organizations off my list, saving hundreds of dollars."—F. McMullin; Stellacoom, Wash.

• "Your article on how to save $100 on a color TV worked. Moneysworth sure knows how to hold onto the green."—Phillip Allen; Director of Student Union; Henderson State College; Arkadelphia, Ark.

• "Your article on 'coupon refunding' got my husband and me hooked on the hobby. It saves us enough each year to pay for our vacation."—Grace Ellen Feingold; Brooklyn, N.Y.

• "Your suggestion that readers buy $200-deductible car insurance instead of the usual $50-deductible saved me hundreds of dollars. Insurance salesmen hate like hell to sell it because there's little profit in it for them, but it sure saves me money."—Gary W. Goodwin; Sunland, Calif.

• "For years I had always been the victim of greedy car mechanics till Moneysworth steered me to Jimmy's Service Station in Guttenberg, New Jersey. My old '66 Ford now runs much better than most new cars and the amount of money Jimmy has saved me—compared with estimates I've gotten from other mechanics—is unreal. Moneyworth, you're terrific!"—Mrs. Dorothy Tyborshi; Secaucus, N.J.

• "You sure did us a good turn recommending Mayflower for our move from California to Minnesota. Would you believe the bill was a hundred bucks under the estimate?"—Donald J. Ganser; Owatonna, Minn.

• "Upon Moneysworth's advice, I asked the phone company for an itemized bill. As a result, I discovered that for years I had been paying for a nonexistent extra line. Result: A $550 refund. My trial subscription has paid for itself 110 times over!"—George T. Pelsche; Washington, D.C.

• "Your article on TV game shows gave me the confidence to try out for 'The $10,000 Pyramid.' I won $850!"—Ted Zammit; Franklin Square, N.Y.

• "I have deposited $12,500 in a Mexican bank, as you suggested, and have been receiving very high interest checks every month by airmail. Boy, am I grateful to you!"—Charles T. Malburn; Sarasota, Fla.

• "Your suggestion that I use a fake name in the phone directory, instead of paying $1 per month for an unlisted number, alone pays for my Moneysworth subscription several times over."—Carlyle B. Russell; New York.

• "Your report that dentures cost only $40 at the Sexton-Shealy Dental Clinic of Florence, South Carolina, saved me, literally, hundreds of dollars. They fitted me up in 24 hours and I was able to complete the entire procedure during a vacation to Florida. I have never before written a testimonial to a magazine, but I couldn't let my gratitude remain unexpressed in this instance."—Mrs. H. Petruccio; Frackville, Pa.

• "Moneysworth is aptly named. To paraphrase Churchill, 'Never have so many paid so little for so much.'"—David Alperin; Pittsburgh, Pa.

As you can see, reading Moneysworth is the next best thing to being born rich. It provides protection against the ups and downs of economic fortune.

The price of a 10-Week Special Cut-Rate Introductory Subscription, as we said, is ONLY ONE DOLLAR! That's right, only one buck, smacker, greenback, simoleon, boffo, bean, eight-bit, frugskin, lettuce leaf, shimplaster.

tion teacher. He was reared in a middle-class family, participated in sports, enjoyed the rock music of the 1950's as played by Chuck Berry, Bo Diddley, Muddy Waters, and Fats Domino. He did well in school and in 1962 entered the London School of Economics on a government grant. He studied economics for two years before quitting to devote his full time to the Stones.

The name Rolling Stones was borrowed from a song by Muddy Waters, "The Rolling Stones Blues."

Jagger entered the band business pretty much through a circumstantial meeting. On the train to London to attend college he ran into a former Dartford Grammar School classmate, Keith Richard, a guitar-playing art student. They renewed their friendship and Richard introduced Jagger to another guitarist, Brian Jones. Soon the trio moved into a dilapidated Chelsea flat, began playing rock 'n' roll, opened at a small jazz club in London.

The money rolls in Thirteen years after their first engagement, the Rolling Stones are multimillionaires. Four of the five original Stones have survived. Brian Jones drowned in his swimming pool in 1969, reportedly self-drugged. A few weeks ago the Stones finally surpassed the Beatles in total number of top-10 albums. Two of their latest "Made in the Shade" and "Metamorphosis," bring their total to 22. The Beatles, who broke up their fabulously successful outfit five years ago, have 21.

Money and acclaim have permitted the Stones to scowl their way into Establishment society, protesting they were never really the lower-class bad boys they made themselves out to be.

Jagger, who once dismissed marriage as a pagan rite, is married to Bianca Perez Morena de Macias, a former model from Nicaragua. They have a daughter, Jade, who'll be 4 in October.

A literate musician, Mick Jagger is fond of art, travel, antique-collecting and such luxuries as limousines, fine wines, and hand-tailored clothes. Offstage he is surely no anti-Establishment character. One of his confidants reports, "Mick is the brains and guts of the organization, he's like a chairman of the board. Those two years he spent at the London School of Economics weren't for nothing. He asks the right questions and keeps asking them until he gets what he considers satisfactory answers."

Special attractions

Jagger and company are bright enough to offer their fans the extras that other rock groups overlook. On his last tour here, Jagger included a 20-foot-long rubberized phallus that exploded from the center of a specially built $4 million stage. In one Los Angeles performance he grabbed a rope, swung out some 30 feet Tarzan-style above the audience. On another night he tossed buckets of water at Liza Minnelli, his wife and other fans.

Offstage he is apt in personal conversations to condemn the excesses of private enterprise, but he is also quick to take advantage of tax loopholes. He is, for example, a British tax exile whose legal residence is now in France. Significant, too, is the fact that in their 13 years of existence, the Stones have played only one major benefit concert, and that for the earthquake victims in Bianca's native Nicaragua.

By projecting irreverence, sexuality, and an anti-Establishment image, the Rolling Stones continue to thrive. So long as Mick Jagger remains front and center, the Stones have it made. The only character in the entire music business who rivals Jagger is his fellow Englishman, Elton John. The summer of 1975 belongs to them.

100% Polyester Knit version of the $100 Originals!

It's what they're wearing at MUCH LESS than they're paying: Partly a military look, with tailored 4-pocket jacket. Partly a safari look, with semi-shaped waist & square tails. And partly a masculine western look, with contrast color stitching and matching dress slacks.

It is the younger, better looking new style being worn by every kind of man, from campus to corporation, to country club! If you ever care what your look like, Mister, this year you gotta have a Leisure Suit!
